Martin Calls On Congress To Veto CAA Transfer

Nonpartisan Action To Spare Aviation Industry Asked By G. O. P. Leader

By William V. Nessly

House Republican Leader Martin last night called for defeat of the Presidential order transferring the CAA to the Commerce Department, as Congress headed into a five-day schedule of turmoil and contention.

Martin, in a statement declaring the order, which would abolish the Air Safety Board in addition to putting the Civil Aeronautics Authority into the Commerce framework, "should be vetoed by Congress," added:

"I am hopeful that, by prompt nonpartisan action this week, our great civil aviation industry may be spared further disruption and embarrassment at the hands of political bureaucrats."

Comes Up Wednesday

The resolution of disapproval for the order, introduced by Senator McCarran (Democrat), of Nevada, is to be considered on Wednesday by the Reorganization Committee, headed by Senator Byrnes (Democrat), of South Carolina.

In addition to this contest, Congress faced other issues involving more or less strife as it sought to clear up the calendar for adjournment about June 1.

The Hatch "clean politics" bill will be before the House Judiciary Committee again tomorrow in a move to reconsider the committee's action in pigeonholing it, as a petition to force it to the floor rapidly gained signatures.

Approved by a Judiciary subcommittee, the Logan-Walter bill to provide for court review of rules and regulations of more than 100 government administrative agencies will be before the full committee today. It is opposed by the Administration but has passed the House.

The question of battleships' vulnerability to air attack will get attention of the Senate Naval Committee, as it questions Secretary of the Navy Edison and Admiral Harold C. Stark, Chief of Operations, on conflicting claims growing out of the German campaign in and around Norway.

Strong to Testify

The $785,000,000 military supply bill will be the subject of testimony by Brigadier General George V. Strong, in charge of the Army's War Plans Division, before the Senate Appropriations Committee.

Farm parity payments and funds for surplus crop removel, aggregating $297,000,000, and added to the farm bill by the Senate, are to be voted on in the House Wednesday.

Discontinuance of Government purchases of foreign silver will be further debated in the Senate today as it considers the measure by Senator Townsend (Republican), of Delaware, to stop the program.

A conference report on the $110,000,000 rivers and harbors authorization bill is due to reach the House tomorrow.

Minority Leader Martin's statement on the CAA reorganization declared that, though the executive order has been before the country for almost five weeks," nothing has been presented to explain or justify the proposed abolition of the Air Safety Board." He said the latter agency, in cooperation with the CAA, "gave the United States its first year without a fatality in commercial air transport"

Political Developments

MARYLAND PRIMARIES today will select nominees for the Senate and House and choose delegates to Democratic and Republican State conventions.

G. O. P. NATIONAL Chairman John Hamilton announced he would call members-designate of the party's resolution committee to start its platform drafting a week before the National convention opens. Page 2.

COUNTY CONVENTIONS in Texas tomorrow will throw more light on whether Garner or Roosevelt forces are actually in control. Page 2.

PRIMARIES OR STATE conventions in Idaho, Indiana, South Dakota, Alabama, Florida, North Dakota, Arkansas and Iowa will attract additional political interest Page 2.

Idle Benefits Are a Failure, Survey Says

Billion and a Half Reserve Attributed To Small Payments

By the Associated Press

New York, May 5.—While relief officials sought a means to prevent acute suffering among the jobless, the Nation's unemployment insurance funds had a collective reserve of more than $1,500,000,000 at the end of 1939, the American Association for Social Security said today.

Small unemployment benefit payments—averaging $84.24 a year—accounted for the condition, the association, an independent organization engaged for 13 years in the study of social insurance, said in the May issue of Social Security, reporting on a survey of the operation of the country's 51 separate unemployment insurance administrations.

The "failure" of the present setup is indicated, the association said, by low payments and their short duration.

Survey's Results

"The undertaking of unemployment insurance as a superior method of social protection than relief is justified only if the insurance benefits cover the needs of the worker for the week issued, and also provide for a long enough period to tide the great majority of workers over their period of unemployment," the survey said.

Results of the survey included these points:

That the average recipient of unemployment insurance received $84.24 in 1939, while relief payments averaged $297 per recipient, and WPA payments averaged $633.

That while insurance payments increased $36,000,000 over 1939, relief expenditures . . . rose by $6,000,000.

That only 54 cents out of every dollar collected for unemployment insurance in 1939 was paid out in benefits.

Average Less Than $10

That in 26 of the 51 unemployment insurance jurisdictions all weekly checks averaged less than $10 as compensation for total unemployment.

That weekly checks distributed in payment for partial unemployment were so low as to be almost meaningless—with 19 per cent of them being for less than $3, and 44 per cent of them amounting to less than $5.

That administrative expenses for unemployment insurance and job placement activities required 15.3 per cent of total benefit payments.

Maryland Votes Today In Primary

800,000 Registered But Total Ballots Are Not Expected To Exceed 450,000

Baltimore, May 5.—Maryland's lackadaisical primary campaign wound to a close tonight as political subalterns went to bed early in preparation for tomorrow's ballot battle, high-lighted by the Democratic Senatorial contest between Senator Radcliffe and National Committeeman Howard Bruce.

Supplemental registration in eight counties this week added an estimated 50,000 "independent" voters to the early "machine" enrollment, but observers here believe the outcome still hangs upon the strength of factional organizations and the solidity of political alliances formed in the past four months.

Registration figures approach a total of 800,000, with the Democrats 2-to-1 in the lead, but a light turnout, not to exceed 450,000, is expected.

Dewey Unopposed

Thomas E. Dewey, New York district attorney, is slated to pick up the State's 16 Republican National Convention votes, since he is the only candidate in the field, and both Republican factions have indorsed him.

An uninstructed Democratic delegation is virtually assured, since no candidate filed for that party's Presidential preference vote. An outside chance remained, however, that the State convention would instruct the delegation for Senator Tydings as a favorite son candidates, should Tyding's choice, Senator Radcliffe, triumph tomorrow.

Radcliffe, completing his first term, is backing the State organization headed by Gov. O'Conor, with which Bruce, a Maryland banker, industrialist and sportsman, has long been identified. Tydings and Mayor Howard Jackson, of Baltimore, have stumped the State actively in the incumbent's behalf.

Observers point out the hazy nature of the issue as revealed by Radcliffe's announcement that former Representative David J. Lewis will vote for him tomorrow.

"Purge" Recalled

Lewis was the Administration-backed candidate in the attempt to "purge" Senator Tydings in the 1938 primary campaign.

Despite this, Bruce, who is dependent for victory upon success in at least two of Baltimore's six election districts, was believed strongest in the First and Sixth districts, both of which went overwhelmingly for Lewis in 1938.

Other Democratic contests see Representative D'Alesandro fighting for renomination against his predecessor, Vincent L. Palmisano, and five others in the Third Congressional District. In the Fourth District, Representative Kennedy has two opponents, Stewart Brown and John A. Meyer.

Representative William D. Byron is unopposed in the Sixth District, and Represetnative Sasscer is regarded a "safe" winner in the Fifth District against Dr. John William Klemm, of Mount Rainier, who has been defeated in previous primaries. Representative Cole, or the Second District, is also regarded a "safe" winner against his two opponents.

A comical note was struck in Rockville, seat of Montgomery County. When Bruce headquarters put up a large banner reading "Democratic Headquarters," the Radcliffe followers next door posted a sign reading "Democratic Headquarters—Main Entrance."

Stars Over Washington

Though Washington shimmered with stars last night, not even the canniest astronomer could have found most of them.

An Actors' Fund Benefit drew a dozen actors and actresses here from Hollywood and Broadway. Opening of a new musical comedy at the National tonight brought Irving Berlin and other stage notables to town. But, to the puzzlement of fans and autograph seekers, many of the stars kept out of sight in untheatrical fashion.

There was Vivian Leigh, for instance, who staged a retake of "Gone With the Wind," or so it seemed to autograph collectors who pursued the rumor of her presence down Fourteenth street from hotel to hotel. There were Laurence Swarthout, Sheila Barrett, Dennis Olivier. Walter Huston, Gladys King and Olson and Johnson who, with Miss Leigh, failed to show up for a gala dinner at the Ambassador Hotel.

Daniel Frohman, elderly producer who is in charge of the Actors Fund, dined at a nearby empty table with Taylor Holmes, Violet Heming and Peggy Wood.

A European expert, a political observer and an art lover who came to town yesterday to unfold for Washington theatergoers the musical comedy story of "The Louisiana Purchase," were discovered in a secluded hotel room.

By their correct names, this as-

Girl Beaten To Death, Sex Slayer Hunted

Victim Is Killed Near Where Coed Died 5 Weeks Ago

By the Associated Press

Bellefonte, Pa., May 5.—Waylaid on a lonely road attractive Fay Gates 25, match factory worker, was found brutally slain early today about 12 miles from where Coed Rachel Taylor died under similar circumstances five weeks ago.

Coroner Charles Sheckler said Miss Gates had been criminally attacked and that she may have been slain "by the same person who killed Rachel Taylor."

"It looks like a sex fiend did it although the body wasn't mutilated as much as Rachel Taylor's. Miss Gates was beaten on the head with a blunt instrument possibly an iron bar found in her car."

Dr. William Schwartz, of Bellefonte, reported the young woman died of five skull fractures.

Found Beside Automobile

Miss Gates' body was found beside her automobile on a mudddy detour about a mile from her home and 9 miles from this central Pennsylvania town in a section known as Spook Hollow.

Early today Miss Gates had driven two girl companions to their homes and was returning to her own home when set upon. Her companions—Maude Rager, 17, and Ruth Robinson, 19—told police a "tan car" had been following them, the driver tooting his horn several times.

"Case of Murder"

Sheckler, who handled both cases, when asked if there was a possibility Miss Gates might have been accidentally killed by an automobile, replied:

"No, this is a case of murder. She had evidently been beaten badly on the head. The body was covered with blood. We could not tell, before the autopsy, just what if any other injuries had been inflicted, or whether she had been criminally assaulted."

Miss Gates was described as blonde, weighing about 110 pounds, and was popular in her community. She was a graduate of Bellefonte High School, and lived with her parents and four sisters.

"Spook Hollow," lies between Bellefonte and the Gates home in the village of Mount Eagle. The body was discovered at 2 a. m. by a young man who had just left the Gates home, where he had visited Fay's sister, Lois. He telephoned the sheriff's office.

Relief Needs In War Zones To Be Stressed

Red Cross to Open Convention Today Aware of Great Task

The "economic casualties" of the war—the more than 2,000,000 persons who are refugees or evacuees in Europe—give an unprecedented challenge and scope to the problem of relief, Ernest J. Swift, vice chairman of the American Red Cross in charge of foreign operations, said yesterday on the eve of its National convention.

With approximately $1,450,000 in cash already given from here and with new needs rising as the war spreads, the United States and its Red Cross must be considered as "a great reservoir" for helping sufferers in this crisis, said Malcolm Davis, who has just arrived from Geneva for the convention. He is associate secretary general of the League of Red Cross Societies.

The convention, which opens at 9:45 a. m. today in Constitution Hall, is expected to be the largest of its kind ever to meet here. Drawn from all parts of the Nation by the urgency of the suffering in Europe, as well as by concern for domestic activities, more than 3,200 delegates are due to attend.

Diplomats to Attend

Diplomatic representatives from Norway, Finland, England, Poland, Czecho-Slovakia and 10 other countries will attend the opening session, when Norman Davis, chairman of the American Red Cross, will deliver the keynote address. It will be broadcast nationally and by short wave to South America and Europe.

Among the visitors will be Miss Nan L. Dorsey, of London, from the Florence Nightingale International Foundation, and Mme. Yolanda Foti, of Budapest, from the Hungarian Red Cross.

Swift and Malcolm Davis, both of whom will address tonight's session at 7:45 at Constitution Hall, yesterday discussed some of the complications of relief in this new type of warfare with its mass migrations.

The American Red Cross has acted in the Norwegian crisis, Swift said, among its latest moves.

"We sent $10,000 directly to the Swedish Red Cross for the aid of refugees from Norway. We have placed a credit of $25,000 and have asked the British Red Cross to act as agent for the purchase and shipment of medical and hospital sup-

Street-Cleaner Becomes Bishop Over 400 Churches

New York, May 5 (AP).—A pious 38-year-old street cleaner, Eustachio Paolicelli, today was consecrated bishop of the Church of God, an independent denomination, in a colorful ceremony in the sect's Jamaica Temple.

Five hundred persons, including officials of the Department of Sanitation and the City Streetcleaners' Glee Club, attended the services.

As a bishop Paolicelli will have supervision of 400 Italian churches in New York, Jersey City, Philadelphia and other cities as far south as Atlanta.

No student of theology, he was elevated as a reward for his activity in church affairs. Sanitation department officials said he had "a splendid record" with the broom.

Hungary Arrests Hundreds as Spies For France, Soviet

Budapest, May 5 (AP).—A huge spy and propaganda organization, said to have been working both for France and Russia in former Czecho-Slovakia regions annexed by Hungary, was smashed by Hungarian authorities last week, it was disclosed today.

Almost 200 persons were arrested at Kassa, Ungvar and Munkacs.

The German Gestapo furnished Hungary with information leading to the arrests, it was reported, and one of those arrested proved to be a German secret police agent who wormed his way into the conspiracy to betray it.

Some of those arrested had plans of the Arpad defense line, which Hungary recently built along her Ruthenian frontier facing Russia in Poland.

Norse Fort Surrenders, Nazis Claim

Hegra Yields As Allied Troops Hurry to North, Berlin Announces

By the Associated Press

Berlin, May 5.—Detachments of British and French troops, apparently left behind in the Allied withdrawal from Namsos, are hurrying northward in what may be an attempt to launch an attack on Narvik from the south, DNB, official German news agency, reported today.

The movement of the Allied troops, it said was discovered in scouting operations while the main force of the German army of occupation pushed its hold on Norway as far as the railheads of Namsos and Grong north of Trondheim and continued "mopping up" action in central and southern Norway.

Meanwhile, the German air force struck again today at Narvik, according t othe Berlin radio, bombing Allied slae and land forces. One bomb scored a direct hit on a British battleship, the radio claimed, while another exploded a munitions dump in an enemy encampment near Narvik.

Surrender today of a "diehard" group of Norwegian soldiers in the rock-ribbed fortress of Negra 20 miles east of Trondheim was announced by D. N. B.

Surrounded by German mounted troops, a force of 15 officers and 160 men in the fotress capitulated, the agency said.

Under Pressure Two Weeks

Hegra fortress, guarding the railroad to the Swedish border from Trondheim, had been under German pressure for more than two weeks.

As long ago as April 22 the Germans were reported attacking from two sides, but the Norwgeians, favored by the difficult terrain, were able to withstand them. With the withdrawal of Alllied forces from Andalsnes and Namos, the Negra garrison lost hope of being relieved.

DNB asserted British and French detachments had been cut off from the main expeditionary force by German aerial attacks on the embarkation operations at Namsos last Wednesday and Thursday.

German military quarters speculated whether the Britsh and French would attempt to reach Narvik, the ore port north of the Arctic Circle, where a German garrison is holding out against Allied attacks supported by planes, warships and artillery.

Rugged Terrain a Barrier

To do so, these isolated Allied troops would have to make their way through more than 300 miles of the most mountainous, difficult terrain in Norway. A single highway runs north as far as Bodo, on the coast. But there is no road for the 100 miles from there to Narvik, and the intervening country is dotted with mountains and rendered even more difficult to negotiate by numerous deep-running fjords, streams and lakes.

At Narvik itself, the high command announced, repeated attacks by "strong enemy forces supported by fliers" on German "security units" north of the town "were repulsed by cooperative action of our own land forces and airmen."

(The British war office reported operations are continuing in the Narvik area while in Paris official French advices said operations in northern Norway are proceeding "most satisfactorily."

(A French war ministry spokesman said that Allied fleet and land guns were shelling some 3,000 Reich troops holding the Narvik port. The spokesman declared that German

THREAT OF WAR hangs again over Southeast Europe, but without any definite indications as to its time, place or outbreak.

GERMAN TROOPS, bombing and retaking Roror, mopped up in Norway, capturing Hegra Fortress, while Allied attacks on Narvik continue.

ITALY EXPECTS Germany to invade England, according to Giovanni Ansaldo, journalistic mouthpiece of Foreign Minister Ciano.

BRITAIN DENIES German air bombs sank a British battleship and cruiser Friday, and Berlin answers by repeating the claim and announcing a "direct hit" on another dreadnaught.

BRITAIN'S CABINET appears likely to ride out a storm of criticism this week; Norway's foreign minister reaches England, broadcasting pledge Allies will redeem his nation.

FRENCH TROOPS claimed to have repulsed another German attack on the Western Front.

Italian Editor Hopes Britain Is Invaded

Fascist Leaders Believe England Is Already Beaten

By Herbert L. Matthews

Copyright by New York Times

Rome, May 5.—Hope and belief that Germany will invade Britatin was expressed today by Giovanni Ansaldo in his weekly broadcast to the armed forces. Ansaldo is close to Foreign Minister Ciano, and is considered an authoritative spokesman.

At any rate, he is doubtless saying what is in the minds of many Fascist leaders here, where there seems to be a conviction that the Germans are invincible and the British already as good as beaten. The Italian press goes all out today in its demonstration of this belief and incidentally continues its warning to the Allies that Italy is prepared for anything in the Mediterranean.

"Naturally, all the world understood that the Allied objective in Norway was extremely difficult to attain," Ansaldo said, "and this very fact proves the superficiality of the Allied political leaders, who announced that they would free Norway."

Invasion of England

He then went on to speak of Prime Minister Chamberlain's statement that Britain intends to reinforce the defenses of her own territory.

"That declaration," said Ansaldo, "had a grave effect in England. We do not know whether Chamberlain made this statement for propaganda or from conviction, but we think it was probably from conviction and we would like to add that we are of the same opinion. We would also like to presume that in this war we will see exactly that—an invasion of England.

"The technical means at the disposition of England's enemy are so efficient that the blow dreamed of by Napoleon will be carried out. We are witnessing ever more spectacular developments, the scope of which shake the world's foundations.

"The effect of all this for us will be to strengthen our solidarity with the Duce and to convince us that the Italian people will come out of this immense crisis with full power and greatness."

Ansaldo was presumably referring to the much advertised German "secret weapon" in his reference to spectacular developments. When German foreign minister Von Ribbentrop was here in March he never missed an opportunity to speak darkly of this secret weapon and, indeed, all Germans here have been talking about it.

Last Round Is Over

J. S. Larowe, Grand Old Man Of Southern Boxing, Dies

By the Associated Press

Charlottesville, Va., May 5.—Coach Johnny (John S.) Larowe, the grand old man of Southern boxing, lost his last bout today.

Death came to the 73-year-old veteran of 19 successful seasons at the University of Virginia about noon at his home where he had been trying to throw off an illness that sent him to the hospital for an operation a month ago and since had never relinquished its hold.

A relapse last week forewarned intimates that the remarkable career of the one-time Marine and billiard parlor operator who turned into one of the Nation's most successful boxing coaches might be nearing its close.

Death was attributed to aneurysms, the enlargement of arteries in the abdomen.

Larowe piloted the Cavaliers to seven undefeated seasons and closed his 19 years here with a record of 78 dual meet victories against 24 defeats and 9 ties. His teams won seven out of ten Southern Conference championships before Virginia withdrew from the circuit, and his individual proteges included 15 conference champions and four National collegiate titleholders.

The soundness of the Larowe system was further attested in the 1933-39 record of only two dual meet losses on schedules including the strongest teams of East and South.

A serious illness in 1936 left the Troops Mass In Balkans Amid Tense Maneuvers

Allies to Land At Salonika, Says Berlin, Sending Planes to Hungary

By J. M. Roberts, Jr.

Associated Press Staff Writer

Troops concentrated on virtually every frontier in Europe last night. The continent was ending another crucial weekend.

But, unlike the night four weeks ago when Britain announced she was mining Norwegian territorial waters, last night's sign posts pointed in so many directions as to be almost useless as guides to the specific future.

Allied troops, 60,00 of them, stood by their transports in Egypt; 50,000 Turks were reported at the Grecian border. Italy, still mildly protesting her innocence of any imediate warlike intentions, was reported to have 55,000 trops and an intense naval concentration in the Dodecanese Islands. Reinforcements steamed toward the already heavy Allied naval gathering at Alexandria and in the Aegean.

Reports were published in Germany that the Allies were about to debark troops at Salonika, on the Greek coast—where the Greeks only yesterday opened a new railroad connecting with Bulgaria.

Grmans were active in Slovakia, with munition shipments and communication building going forward at a rapid pace, and more than 300,000 Russians faced Hungary across what used to be the Czech bordder of Ruthenia.

Curiously, Budapest observers regarded the Russian troop movements as the brightest sign in the picture, since they might be for the purpose of forestalling any Italian-German plan to divide the Balkans.

As four weeks ago, the news last night came principally from Allied activities. What the men in Rome and Berlin were doing and thinking about southeastern Europe was cloaked in silence.

Change of Policy Possible

The question raised can only be answered by evenis, but one which caused speculation was:

Has England, who took the dirty end of the stick in Norway by declining to intervene there until after the Germans did so, established a situation whereby she might now take the initiative herself in neutral territory? Can she say to Greece and Bulgaria that events are shaping up, that they must at least permit troop transits to permit the Allies to be in position this time before, not after any German move?

This negotiation apparently is under way, or those Turkish troops would not be massed at the Grecian border awaiting a visa, and others would not be near Bulgaria, where Sofia officials said the Turks were violating a mutual agreement against massing of forces.

Political sources in Sofia said the British ambassador to Turkey was there for such troop transit negotiations. The road through Bulgaria is the road along which the Allies could march more than a million men now awaiting orders.

May All Be Politics

And so another question is raised. Does Britain know something, as she did several days before the German invasion of Norway, or is she trying to prove to Balkan neutrals that she is prepared, that she is on hand in force, and that there is no need for them to cuddle up to Hitler?

The mere expression of Allied willingness to move troops into the Balkans now may be designed to foster the latter premise. It may all be politics, rather than preparation of an immediate battlefield. London circles added some evidence on this with statements that neutrals need not fear England will let them down, even though the tide

SUGAR-COATED BITS OF CHAOS

WHO BUT MRS. PERKINS? The Secretary of Labor is anxious to leave the Cabinet—so say some of the best-posted New Dealers. Privately, she has wanted to resign for some time. But she has kept her post reluctantly because of the difficulty of choosing a successor okay to both John L. Lewis and Bill Green, the wrangling C. I. O. and A. F. of L. chieftains.

2 SLANTS: Some of the White House boys are gleefully showing around two headlines based on the same poll by Fortune Magazine.

One, in the New York Post (New Deal), reads, "Roosevelt Far Outstrips the field in Fortune's 1940 Poll."

* * * *

The other, in the anti-New Deal New York Sun, says "Finds Majority Is Dissatisfied With New Deal."

The two headlines were based on the same figures, which showed FDR's vote strength 2½ times Dewey's.

WHITE PAPER: Many observers in the Capitol are convinced that Alsop & Kintner's "American White Paper" was seen, and perhaps edited a little, at the White House before it was published. While it is fairly obvious that the chief source of information was Assistant Secretary of State Adolph Berle, whose diary is quoted, the White House touch is not invisible.

"——seen at the White House"

In fact, when the President said, in answer to a question at a press conference, that he had read the book, someone mumbled another question:

"Before or after it was published?"

But this question was lost in the usual press conference hullaballoo.

* * * *

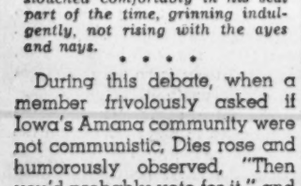
So it is assumed that the President has accepted this way of putting his foreign policy before the Republic a little more fully and candidly: All help short of war for the democracies; no involvement; no army for overseas; a question mark opposite the possibility of sending our warships and our Army and Navy pilots and planes; a big question mark opposite "What if the Allies are losing?"

* * * *

The 107-page, $1, paper-bound book is worth reading also for its word picture of the President discussing foreign policy at early breakfast-in-bed powwows, in his blue cape over his pajamas, and for a few passages from Mr. Berle's diary, especially the one which begins:

* * * *

"A rather shattering day, as during it the nerve ganglia of Europe began to decay. I have a horrible feeling of seeing a civilization breaking, of seeing it dying before its actual death."



"——leave something for Goebbels"

DIES IN PORT: Martin Dies has become an authentic celebrity on Capitol Hill. At 39 he is rounding out his tenth year in the House and is probably the most famed headliner of the lower chamber. If he behaves like a celebrity, that is perhaps forgivable.

* * * *

He strolls on the floor occasionally, shakes hands and exchanges quips and backslaps with admirers. Often he doesn't bother to vote on pending measures. When 14 amendments to the Wages and Hours Act were voted on, he sat slouched comfortably in his seat part of the time, grinning indulgently, not rising with the ayes and nays.

* * * *

During this debate, when a member frivolously asked if Iowa's Amana community were not communistic, Dies rose and humorously observed, "Then you'd probably vote for it," and departed amid some laughter. At closed meetings of his un-Americanism committee he is apt to lie stretched out on a big leather couch, because his health is still far from rugged.

* * * *

NAZI DOCUMENTS: Berlin's weakness for flaunting alleged documents, to spread the impression that in their conquests they have barely forestalled the wicked British, inspires some Capital wits to suggest that the British might just as well forge their own documents, and leave standing orders to leave a few for Ribbentrop and Goebbels whenever they or their allies evacuate a town.

The gist of these documents might be, "Here come the British with a bang-bang."

G.O.P. to Map Platform Week Before Parley

Leaders Approve Hamilton's Proposal For Presession Confab

A quick get-away on the task of writing the 1940 Republican platform was assured last night as National Chairman John Hamilton announced he will summon members-designate of the resolutions committee to Philadelphia a week in advance of the convention opening June 24.

Hamilton said in a statement that his proposal, advanced April 20 in a letter to Republican State chairmen had been "universally received" with "approval and commendation."

"Many of those who have written to me," his statement said, "expressed the opinion that this plan, if carried out, would result in the formation of a stronger and better phrased platform since the preliminary work could be done with deliberation and without haste.

"Likewise it was contended that by meeting in advance the members of the resolutions committee could better weigh all viewpoints within the party than if this group had only two or three crowded days for its deliberations."

Busy Week in Politics

The announcement came at the start of a week of political events expected to have considerable influence by revealing preconvention sentiment in both parties. The week's schedule includes:

Today—Maryland primaries will select delegates to State Republican and Democratic conventions. Idaho Republicans will select eight delegates to the national convention in a State-wide gathering.

Tomorrow—Texas Democrats in State convention select delegates. Primary elections for both parties in California, Indiana and South Dakota, and Democratic primaries in Alabama and Florida.

Wednesday — Prohibition Party national convention opens in Chicago.

Says President Sees Dangers

Apparently referring to the President's appointment of Assistant Secretary of Commerce J. Monroe Johnson to the ICC and his announced intention to name CAA Chairman Robert H. Hinckley to Johnson's post, Martin said:

"Recent transfers and appointments in the Commerce Department by the President indicated that he too recognizes the dangers which may result to aviation.

"Congress should refuse to submit the safety of the air to the whim of any one individual. Set aside the order and there will be no sword constantly dangling over the head of aviation."

Both Houses must act adversely on the order within 60 days of its submission by the President to block its become effective.

Senator McCarran last night expressed determination to force action, invoking drastic rules if necessary, to get his resolution to the floor, where he said it would command an overwhelming majority. A companion measure in the House has been offered by Represenative Lea (Democrat), of California.

Green Opposes Pension Panacea In Pamphlet

The American Federation of Labor said in a discussion of old age pension proposals yesterday that there was "no magic in the payment of pensions which permits the government to supply some people with incomes without taking money for these incomes from other people."

In the preface to a pamphlet, "A Rainbow Pot of Gold, or Dependable Income for Old Age," which was distributed to members, President William Green said:

"Persons baiting you with Townsend plans, 'ham and eggs', or soft promises of $60 a month when you are 55 or 60, if single, and $90 if married, never tell what the plan will cost, who will pay for it, or prove that you will really get it."

Green pictured a well-rounded expansion of the Social Security law to cover more adequately elderly persons, as a superior alternative. He said the AFL is working in that direction.

Higher Farm Income in U. S. Is Anticipated

Domestic Demand Offsets War Curbs, Agriculture Finds

By the Associated Press

The Agriculture Department predicted yesterday that despite restrictive effects of the war on agricultural exports, the income of American farmers would be higher during the first half of this year than in the corresponding period last year.

Domestic demands had been more than offsetting losses abroad, the department said, adding that prospects pointed to further improvements in the home market this summer and fall.

Better prices prevail than a year ago, with wheat making the best gain. Other products drawing better prices include cotton, feed grains and vegetables. On the other hand, hog prices are lower because they are burdened by supplies disportionately larger than the increase in consumer demand.

General Prospect Summary

As farmers, employing 2,500,000 hired hands at wages higher than a year ago, moved ahead with their olanting, the department issued this general summary of agricultural prospects:

A smaller world wheat crop indicated.

Feed grain supplies in the United States expected to be smaller this year than last, even though the surplus of old corn on October 1 may be 100,000,000 bushels larger than the 573,000,000 bushels last year.

A smaller cotton surplus expected next August 1 as a result of large exports this season. However, exports prospects for the coming season are darker.

Fats, Oil Supply Up

Larger crops of peanuts, soybeans and flaxseed expected this year. They would add to already large supplies of edible fats and oils. Corn belt cattle feeders expect better market for beef animals during the next few months than a year ago.

Marketing of hogs expected to reach seasonal peaks this month and next, then decline until the new spring crop begins to go to slaughter in September and October.

Fed lambs to continue to bring higher prices than a year ago, principally on account of higher wool prices.

The department said that no immediate increase in United States exports of bacon and ham to Great Britain was expected as a result of German occupation of Denmark. It explained that Great Britain had large stocks of bacon, that recent purchases from Denmark had been sharply curtailed and that any larger increases in purchases likely would be from Canada rather than the United States.

Garner Faction's Tactics Anger Rivals in California

San Francisco, May 5 (AP).—Charges that supporters of Vice President Garner are seeking to use the pending recall movement against Gov. Culbert Olson for "political publicity" unfavorable to a Roosevelt-pledged delegation added heat to the California primary campaign today.

The Governor heads the "harmony" slate in behalf of a third term for the President. It is one of four groups contending for Democratic supremacy in next Tuesday's balloting.

Recall petitions, accusing the Governor of incompetency, inefficiency and violation of election pledges, were filed yesterday in several counties.

In Los Angeles County, Francis B. Allchin obtained a temporary court order forbidding the recall committee to file its petitions piecemeal for "political publicity."

A citizens nonpartisan committee against abuse of the recall, asserted the move is "an attempt to influence voters against the delegation of which the Governor is a member."

Olson said he would "leave it to the public to draw its own conclusions as to the motive" for the immediate filing of the recall petitions.

In addition to the Roosevelt and Garner delegations two other groups are seeking the State's 44 votes in the convention. They are a so-called liberal-left wing group "neither for nor against Roosevelt," but advocating New Deal principles, and a "ham and egg" delegation disposed to support "the candidate whose platform most nearly resembles our own."

California Republicans, who likewise have 44 votes, put only an uninstructed slate on their ballot.

Dallas, Tex., May 5.—Delegates pledged to President Roosevelt threaten the control of John N. Garner over the 254 county conventions of Texas Democrats next Tuesday.

The Vice President won heavy support yesterday at thousands of precinct meetings throughout his home State.

But uninstructed delegations, incomplete returns showed, may hold the balance of power at meetings designed to pick and instruct county delegations to the State Democratic convention in Waco on May 28.

Many precincts voted to give Garner the nomination, but in the same breath pledged not to try to stop the President if he sought or was given the nomination.

Highly industrialized southeast Texas and the rich farming belt in the big State's middle favored the President strongly at precinct conventions.

Garner won control of Houston, Dallas and San Antonio, but Fort Worth, where Elliott Roosevelt lives, President Roosevelt got almost a 2-to-1 delegation.

The President's son did not attend his precinct convention at which only three persons showed up. They voted to go to the county meet uninstructed.

Down in San Antonio, where Mayor Maury Maverick, former New Deal Congressman, had opposed Garner, the Vice President won out.

Beaumond and Port Arthur favored President Roosevelt 2 to 1.

Houston gave Garner 600 delegates; Roosevelt, 425; Secretary of State Hull, 16, and 226 were not pledged to any candidate.

Hopkins Sees Immediate Rise In Building

Secretary Predicts Construction Increase In 1 to 4 Family Homes

Secretary of Commerce Hopkins predicted today "an immediate increase in private one to four-family home construction."

He said his prediction was based on a recent sharp rise in applications to the Federal Housing Administration for insurance of mortgages on new houses.

Public residential construction activity should also expand in the immediate future, Hopkins said, since the larger part of the construction contemplated under the program of the United States Housing Authority has not yet appeared in the contract award figures.

At the same time McDonald, Federal housing administrator, announced that the FHA was making a special effort to encourage construction of new homes in rural communities.

He said that the chief problem was to create an interest on the part of the building industry in the small town market.

Another report, by the Bureau of Labor Statistics, said that almost one-third of the families of urban workers were home owners. Home ownership, this report said, was most often reported outside the largest cities.

The bureau estimated that one out of every $4 paid out by the average of employed city wage earners went for housing expense.

Economy League Attacks Veterans' Pension Proposal

Ernest Angell, chairman of the National Economy League, said yesterday that a veterans' pension bill had been "slyly inserted into the agenda of Congress for political purposes in a Presidential year."

The measure, introduced by Representative Rankin (Democrat), of Mississippi, would authorize payment of pensions to widows and orphans of World War veterans who suffered no service-connected disability.

Angell said the bill would entail payments of "millions of dollars" and should be defeated to prevent "a further descent into fiscal lunacy."

Utility Assets 17 Billions, U. S. Reports

393 Companies Own 95 Pct. of Industry, Commission Finds

The Federal Power Commission reported yesterday that assets of 393 electric utilities, representing 95 per cent of the industry, totaled $17,220,617,262 in 1938.

The report said that the 1938 aggregate of utility plant accounts was $14,048,019,026. This represented a book investment in utility property of approximately $5.50 per dollar of annual revenue.

Outstanding securities of the companies on December 31, 1938, the report said, aggregated $13,546,254,340, of which $4,283,686,482 was common capital stock; $2,092,231,351 preferred capital stock; $110,003,486 premiums, assessments, etc.; and $7,060,333,021 bonds and other long term debt. Common stock represented 31.6 per cent of the amount of outstanding securities; preferred stock, 15.4 per cent; premiums assessments, etc., .8 per cent; and bonds and other long term debt, 52.2 per cent.

The combined surplus accounts of the 393 companies, was reported as $1,024,399,410, of which $236,631,241 was capital surplus and $787,768,169 earned surplus.

Electric operating revenues for the year totaled $2,548,532,153. The companies served an average of 19,411,872 residential and domestic customers and 3,689,477 commercial and industrial customers.

Total electric operating expenses exclusive of depreciation or taxes were $930,252,222.

Prosperity does not move on Traffic Lights

Prosperity comes to men who make it with their own hands out of opportunities that others overlook. It comes to them at the very time when others become convinced that Prosperity must wait indefinitely for some green "Go" signal that all the world can see.

The spirit that has carried America forward through the lost battles of ten years of depression is rooted in the initiative, invention and investments of men of courage.

While fearful prophets were forecasting social chaos, and frightened people withdrew their savings from all opportunity for profit, these men moved ahead. In spite of world-wide economic disaster, progress in this country has steadily continued, in thousands of enterprises which refused to admit that civilization was on its last legs.

The upward strides are not confined to a few giant corporations. Far from it. Thousands of small concerns, not even in existence ten years ago, went into action with new products and far-sighted management. They attracted investors. They benefited the public. Many of those enterprises today are household names throughout this country. They are still growing. Other new ones are now getting under way.

Yet today some people insist that the worst is yet to come. They have even bought remote farms, where they can hide out when the chaos and Communism that they expect finally arrive, and revolution wrecks the cities their forefathers built. What a solution!

Fortunately, most Americans don't prefer to be refugees. Theirs is a heroic heritage. They will never stop wanting—and fighting to have—more of the things which make for still higher standards of living. Supplying that imperative market means future business opportunities in endless variety. That is why those who know the history of our country hold to thrift and informed investment as the best of all highways to personal independence, and to economic security for the nation as a whole.

In spite of depressions, foreign wars and economic uncertainties, no country in the world has a greater future than America.

Hindsight and Foresight

By HOLGAR J. JOHNSON
President, Institute of Life Insurance

HOW long do you think you'll live? Ten years or twenty years longer than your father, grandfather, great-grandfather?

Your chances of surviving from infancy to adulthood are a lot better than they used to be. But, I'm sorry to tell you, once you've reached middle life your chance of living to a ripe old age is about the same as it was a hundred years ago.

Why I bring this up is that someone is always asking me, "If we are living so much longer, why don't my premiums go down?" Did you know that the decline in the rate of interest earned on money in recent years has increased the cost of life insurance far more than the improvement in the death rate has reduced it?

Don't let anybody fool you into believing that the life insurance actuaries—the mathematicians of the business—are making any mistakes. Competition in life insurance would very quickly turn up a cheaper policy if any change in the average length of life for a group of people justified it.

The best hopes for lower insurance costs lie in increased interest rates, not in increased length of life.

NOTE: In this regular Monday column, paid for at advertising rates, the Institute of Life Insurance has asked its president to discuss questions of interest to life insurance policyholders. Inquiries may be addressed to 60 East 42nd Street, New York City.

Stars Gather in Capital for Actors' Fund Benefit

Morrie Ryskind, collaborator on the writing of the Pulitzer Prize musical, "Of Thee I Sing," author of the libretto for tonight's show.

B. G. "Buddy" DeSylva, one-time protege of Al Jolson, lyricist, librettist, music publisher, director, motion picture producer, stage impresario and currently the producer of "Louisiana Purchase."

But yesterday, cocktailing at the Willard prior to a last-minute rehearsal, these graduates of Hollywood and Broadway did not appear in their accustomed roles of composer, librettist and producer.

Tiny, wiry Irving Berlin, whose World War songs helped a country to forget some of its troubles, was thinking of the cables from Europe and Hitler's latest victory in Norway.

"Are you going to write a war song for America?" he was asked.

"No, Berlin said with emphasis. "You cannot write a war song until the people are ready for a war song. You cannot hand the people a ready-made propaganda song and expect them to swallow it. They must be ready for it.

"The only kind of a song possible now is a 'Stay-out-of-war' song. But that's no song. It is a fact. There is no emotion in it. And for a good song you've got to have emotion."

Ryskind Declares Himself

Ryskind's mind was on the third-term controversy.

The veteran of New York's Great White Way said:

"The third term is the most dangerous thing that could happen in this country. When one man gets indispensable, then the country is ready for dictatorship. I don't care who hears me. With what is going on in Europe today we just cannot afford to tolerate a third term for anybody."

Ryskind, bespectacled and earnest, is much more than a writer of funny lyrics and jokes.

In 1932, he said yesterday, he actively supported Norman Thomas for the Presidency, and in 1936 he voted for Roosevelt.

DeSylva, honor graduate of the University of California and now a supersuccessful producer with a hearty, infectious laugh, confided yesterday that his deep interest is paintings and etchings.

"In fact," he admitted, "the real reason I booked Washington for a tryout is that I want to see the Daumier etchings at the Phillips Memorial Gallery."

"Louisiana Purchase" tells the story of the rule and misrule of a certain Southern State under a famous political figure resembling the late Huey Long.

DeSylva yesterday said without embarrassment that Senator Overton (Democrat), of Louisiana is expected to attend the opening tonight.

Berlin, said DeSylva, got the laugh of the week when he received a letter from the Louisiana State University Library asking for the script of the show. The library, DeSylva said with a guffaw, thought it was a historical document.

Soldiers Home Section Shows Large Growth

Census Data Reveal Population Trends Throughout Capital

The new homes north of the Soldiers' Home won official designation yesterday as the fastest-growing community in Washington.

Garnett Brown, District census supervisor, gave totals showing a "substantial increase" in District population since the 1930 census, and came up with this ranking for the city's new real estate subdivisions:

Leading the race for fastest-growing section is the area out New Hampshire avenue, north of the Soldiers Home and Rock Creek Cemetery.

Runners-up are the rolling slopes south of the Anacostia River, notably sections like Randle Highlands, that have shown a mushroom growth of new houses in recent years.

Not far behind is the section west of Wisconsin avenue, near Hamilton Circle and American University.

Also deserving of honors for speedy sprouting of new population is the section along Sixteenth street extended, from Madison street and the District Line between Georgia avenue and Rock Creek.

When responsibility for boosting the District's population from 486,869 ten years ago to an estimated 600,000 and more today is finally pinned down, these sections will have to take credit, Brown said.

coach crippled, but he continued to direct his boxers from a wheel chair.

His success as a boxing instructor from the time he organized for the Cavaliers the first intercollegiate boxing squad in the South in 1921 made him one of the Nation's best known coaches of the sport. He was honorary president of the National Intercollegiate Boxing Coaches Association, organized at Charlottesville in 1938.

The coach was noted for turning novices into winners.

LaRowe spent 11 years in the Marine Corps, where he gained early experience in boxing in private bouts and from associates. Before coming to Charlottesville in 1904 as a billiard-parlor operator, he was bugler and drummer at V. M. I., where he organized and directed boxing classes for the Cadets.

He wa sa native of Alexandria, and his family moved to Washington while he still was of elementary school age.

Funeral arrangements had not been completed tonight, but services were not expected to be held until Tuesday or Wednesday.

Surviving are his wife, one son, John H. Larowe, of New Melle, Mo; one daughter, Mrs. Alton Stephens, of Quinque, Va., and several grandchildren. A brother, Frank Larowe, died at Hillside, Md., last week.

Crippled Itinerant Beaten to Death Battling Maniac

Columbia, S. C., May 5 (AP).—An elderly, crippled itinerant was beaten to death in a fight near here today, Sheriff T. Alex Heise reported, with a "raving maniac."

A newsboy reported to officers he had seen two naked men battling in the middle of a concrete highway, and deputies rushed to the vicinity.

There they found the body of the unidentified itinerant in a wood and arrested a man the sheriff said was Washington Metropole, 22, of Darlington.

Metropole was taken to the State asylum.

Heise said the physical evidence at the scene indicated the itinerant had put up a fight for probably as long as an hour and a half. His crutch lay nearby.

Scientists Make Candy Out of Whey

By Edward Ryan.

Scientists in the Department of Agriculture, with a taste for sweets and a serious interest in making waste products useful, have invented a new kind of candy.

Key ingredient is whey, biproduct of cheesemaking.

Inventors of the formula—it's not a recipe yet—are B. H. Webb and C. F. Hufnagel, of the Bureau of Dairy Industry. Their work is part of a series of experiments by bureau scientists to develop new food uses for whey. It is now wasted by the ton.

Main reason their formula has not been made into recipes, said Webb, is that the raw material for the candy, a sweetened condensed whey developed in the bureau, has not yet become available on the market.

Along with their brittle candy, the bureau scientists have used the whey in making fudge and caramels, and for other types of food. They have mixed it with tomato juice, used it in soup, combined it with peanut butter, hidden it in cup cakes and pudding.

Whey even has a place in a steak dinner, said Webb, for it can be used in the gravy.

Although large-scale industrial use of whey is untouched, bureau scientists are satisfied with its food value. The material, they say, contains about half the food solids of the original milk, mostly in the form of milk sugar, with a scattering of minerals and vitamins.

Only objection to the whey is its taste. Even in sweetened condensed form the whey is salty, but that is covered up by the time it is made into candy.

Their newest candy formula calls for supplies of the condensed whey, cooked cereal and nuts, a fast mechanical beater and a drier. The whey material is whipped for five minutes, spread in half-inch layers on cheese cloth and dried for several hours. While the cereal and nuts cover the whey taste, the final product is coated with chocolate to keep out moisture.

Greener grass in Washington's parks will be sought through a five-year testing program announced by Secretary of Interior Harold L. Ickes.

During the past year park officials have studied their lawns, learned that Zoysia betrella grass is good for playgrounds and that increased use of fertilizer helps grass areas in the parks.

Now they intend to extend their studies.

Grounds around the Washington Monument and the Mall between Third and Fourth streets will be used to test best types of grass, rate of seeding for new grass in old turf, and use of low-growing legumes to help poor soil.

In other sections of the Mall they plan to study how often and how long lawns should be watered.

West Potomac Park near the Lincoln Memorial will become a laboratory for testing use of chemicals in removing weeds where reseeding is needed.

Special grasses produced by the Agriculture Department experimental turf garden in Arlington will be tested throughout the parks to determine how they react to heavy shade, excessive heat, heavy wear and excessively dry or wet soil.

The tests will be directed by Dr. John Monteith, jr., director of the greens section for the United Golf Association and collaborator at large for the National Park Service.

Koht Arrives To Consult With British

London Demands 'Grand Inquest' On Northern War

By the Associated Press

London, May 5.—Two cabinet ministers of the fugitive Norwegian government arrived in London today for consultations as strong demands for a "grand inquest" in Parliament on the Allied conduct of the campaign were heard throughout gloomy Great Britain.

Here to talk for Norway's government-in-hiding are its foreign minister, Dr. Halvdan Koht and Defense Minister Col. Birger Ljungberg.

The Norwegians came to a Scottish port on a British warship, with the British Minister to Norway, Sir Cecil Dormer, who had been with the Norwegian regime since it fled Oslo April 9.

Norse Told to Be Patient

A message to the Norwegian people not to lose patience and counseling them to put their trust in the Allies was broadcast from London by Dr. Koht.

He said, after conferences with the Allied leaders, that the Allies had promised Norway "full aid" and that it was a point of honor for them to fulfill that promise.

"We must trust in them and, on our side, we must not lose patience," he said.

Dr. Koht told the Norwegians he would go to Paris and thence back to Norway, where King Haakon VII and his fleeing government are in hiding.

British Wrought Up

Meanwhile, press criticism of the British government's handling of the Norwegian campaign which saw the Allies abandon southern and central Norway to the Nazis presaged a torrid meeting of Parliament Tuesday for a two-day debate.

The average Briton appeared more concerned over the strategic reverse in Norway and the potentialities of German domination there than any danger in the Mediterranean, where the Allies concentrated naval strength last week.

Norway is a good deal nearer Britain than the Mediterranean and the traditional British confidence in the might of the royal navy prompted the belief of the man in the street that the British-French naval forces were capable of handling any development in the Mediterranean.

Cabinet Appears United

Some political circles professed to see indications of a swing to the Chamberlain government's favor in the coming debate.

They argued that the fact that the cabinet apparently is united on the Norwegian policy would blunt the weapons of critics hoping to score against the prime minister on hte ground that the Hrondheim sector would have been saved if Chamberlain had not restrained Winston Churchill, first lord of the admiralty.

It also was said that the prospect of Churchill, generally the cabinet's most popular minister, heading a new cabinet, or even a new war policy, was receding.

Neutral arguments that Britain would let down other neutrals who rely on her after trouble has started are "strongly resented" by Parliament members, and might rally the House of Commons to support the government, it was said.

"Warning" Expected

That resentment, coupled with hitherto undisclosed details of the government's difficulties, likely would persuade the Commons to "let the government off with a warning" British asserted.

However, some political authorities admitted the situation might be altered completely if opposition leaders showed a willingness to accept a "long-standing invitation" of the government to join it.

"Just as Commons on Tuesday is capable if in the mood of forcing some modifications of government personnel or policy despite the cabinet having been unanimous on Norway, so even more quickly will it rally to support the government because of those criticisms if the government makes a reasonably good case," one informed observer said.

Labor Criticism

Carrying on the opposition attack Ellen Wilkinson, laborite, inquired in an address today "why Germany could take a whole country like Norway with 1,500 men and three brass bands."

She added: "And we sent over the might of the British fleet had to blow up stores of Rolls Royce quality at Namsos and leave the Norwegians to fight alone."

The government will have to answer in the House of Commons, she declared, for many people are "profoundly disturbed" at the way the war is going.

First Lady Praises Central Mission

Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt inspected the Central Union Mission and the Children's Emergency Home yesterday and talked to women division leaders and team captains in the drive for $100,000 for additions to the building.

"I can see that you do need more space," she said, "but it is a real pleasure to find a private institution like this in the District of Columbia. I have searched in vain for an institution run by the District of Columbia to which I can point with pride, as you can do with your buildings, but the search has been fruitless. Everywhere I turn the responsibility for such conditions is placed on someone else and it has become a sort of 'merry go round' of blaming someone else for the deficiencies."

Auxiliary Plans Party

The sixth annual call to service party of the Washington auxiliary of the Natjonal Catholic School of Social Service will be held at 8:30 o'clock tonight at the Wardman Park Hotel.

The party, part of a national campaign, has been arranged by Mrs. John F. Victory, chairman, and Mrs. J. Rozier Biggs, president of the Washington auxiliary.

at present has gone against her in Norway.

Aside from the Slovakian activity—where airplanes flew across to tell Slovaks in Hungary that "the day of liberation is near. Hitler is with us. The glorious Slovakian army will deliver you from the Magyar (Hungarian) yoke."—Germany conducted herself as though a direct war with the British Isles was her only niterest.

Focal Points Are Quiet

Belgian shipmasters revealed German minelaying planes had been active in the English Channel for a week, and Rome commentators said Germany was going to invade England Coincidentally, England held mass air-raid precaution practice.

The focal points of the sign posts were Yugoslavia and Rumania—and yet both were quieter than for some time.

Bulgarian officials pointed to Rumania, an dat least they professed no worry about their own borders with Germany and Russia.

It was a week-end rife with speculation and barren of answers.

Allied Armies Reinforced

The Allied armies in Syria and Palestine have been reinforced, according to reliable information here.

Gen. Maxine Weygand, commander of the French forces in the eastern Mediterranean, has been aware for some time of the possibility of a clash with Italy and had insisted, therefore, on the strengthening of his army. An authoritative source said today that during his last trip to Paris a month ogo he obtained from Premier Reynaud a promise of the reinforcements for which he had asked.

The French army in Syria is now believed to have been increased to about 200,000 or perhaps 250,000 men. At the same time more Australians and New Zealanders are expected to be added soon to the some 60,000 men stationed in Palestine and Egypt.

Turkey Is Concerned

Istanbul, May 5.—The dubious attitude of Italy is causing increasing concern here and although all hopes of maintaining peace have not been abandoned, the situation is considered serious.

According to reports from Ankara, views are being exchanged between the various Balkan cabinets.

Balkans Fear Nazi Victory

Belgrade, May 5.—A new type of uneasiness has pervaded the Balkans.

The short-range fear that war would spread here any day has been replaced by the long-range worry that Germany may win the war and relegate the entire region into either a colonial or puppet status.

Second Attack in 24 Hours Repulsed, French Report

Germans Advance Under Protection Of Artillery and Capture Outposts Before They Are Forced to Retire

Paris, May 5.—The French high command reported tonight that German troops attacking in increasing force on the Western Front were driven off by a spirited counter-attack after the Nazis had succeeded in penetrating the line of French advance posts.

The German stab early this morning at French positions in the wooded valleys where the Saar River bends into France was the second Nazi attack in force within 24 hours at the central sector of the 100-mile front between the Moselle and the Rhine.

The Germans attacked behind what the French communique described as "heavy artillery fire."

The fact that they were able to break through the gaps between the French advance posts and surround three of them indicated the attack was considerably more concentrated than that of the morning before, when two companies of Germans were forced back by the crossed fire of French machine guns and automatic rifles.

Small sections of French troops, pinned within the advance posts by the encircling Germans, kept up a steady stream of fire until the French counterattack could be organized from the resistance line to the rear.

The first engagement, which was fought before dawn yesterday and was announced in last night's communique, was described at the war ministry today as an important test showing the solidity of the French positions. There still is no sign of an immediate general offensive, however.

planes attempted to relieve the garrison Saturday by bombing nearby villages. He added that the German position in Narvik is precarious and an early surrender was forseen.)

Stockholm, May 5 (AP).—Sweden, aware that war on a new front would diminish the dangers of further incursions in Scandinavia, tonight gave the keenest attention to reports of Italian and Allied fleet movements in the Mediterranean Sea and, in effect, seemed to regard the conflict in Norway as ended with a German victory.

Men close to the government, foreign observers, Stockholm citizens and the press voiced belief that a Mediterranean conflict would greatly enhance the chances of Sweden and Finland for continued peace. Swedes also said the two nations ought to work together in pursuit of new trade avenues which would lead naturally to Germany and Russia.

King Haakon VII and his government, who fled before the Germans when the invasion began April 9, are believed to be somewhere in the north, possibly in the Arctic area.

The German aviation corps continued active. The newspaper Tidningen quoted Norwegian fliers as predicting a Nazi air offensive would be launched soon against England from Nazi bases established in Norway.

The Germans, carrying their aerial attack to the far north of Norway, bombed Kirkenes, on the Arctic coast near the Finnish Petsamo district, Saturday morning, the Norwegian News Bureau reported. The agency said four bombs were dropped, but little damage was done.

The German airmen also attacked communities near Kirkenes.

British Raid Oslo

Oslo, May 5 (AP).—British bombers raided the Oslo airport Saturday for the sixth time within a week. There was no report on the result.

German military authorities have agreed to let all Norwegian prisoners of war remain in their homeland, it was announced today.

Original plans were for the captives to be interned in Germany. As a result of negotiations with the Norwegian administrative council, however, they will be treated as though they were serving their normal military training period in the Norwegian army, it was said.

Negotiations now are under way for the release of farmers and prisoners less than 16 or more than 60 years old.

Trade Accord Pushed

Except for 5,000 Norwegian soldiers interned in Sweden and one division, virtually all of Norway's mobilized army has been captured. The exact number, however, has not been divulged.

Nazis Claim Battleship Sank Despite Denial

London Derisive As Berlin Reiterates Airplane's Victory

By the Associated Press

London, May 5.—Great Britain tonight officially denied Germany's claim that Nazi warplanes had sunk a 30,000-ton British battleship and a heavy cruiser in concentrated air attacks off the Norwegian coast.

The admiralty broke its silence of more than a day since Germany jubilantly announced that her aircraft had sunk or badly damaged nine British warships and transports off the Norwegian ports of Namsos and Narvik last Friday.

"The German claim to have sunk a British battleship and a cruiser of the York class in the operations off Namsos is untrue," said the admiralty communique.

It made no reference to the other triumphs officially reported by the Nazis, but well informed British sources last night had described the German circles as "of the fantastic character to which the public is fast becoming accustomed."

Berlin, May 5 (AP).—Straight in the face of Britain's official denial, authoritative sources here declared tonight that a British battleship was sunk off Namsos, Norway, by dive bombers Friday and that the high command statement in that respect would not be changed.

The Berlin radio followed up with the claim that German bombers at Narvik had scored a direct hit on another British battleshop Sunday, causing a column of smoke to rise from the vessel. There was no claim, however, that the ship had been sunk.

At the same time, it was learned the Germans had planned yesterday to have one of the pilots participating in the attack on the battleship describe the event to a press conference but that attack group was called on "another mission," the nature of which was not disclosed.

It was said there still is a possibility that one of the pilots might appear before the foreign press to describe the attack.

The high command set the figure for Allied merchant shipping losses through mines and U-boats at close to 2,300,000 tons for the eight months of the war.

(The Associated Press "box score" of merchant and naval shipping losses, for belligerents and neutrals, shows a total of 1,825,357 tons.)

These figures indicated a slackening in the tempo of German attacks in the past two months. Official figures at the close of the six-month war period placed the loss in Allied shipping and neutral shipping destined for the Allies at 1,904,913 gross tons.

On the basis of these figures, the monthly average for the first six months was 317,485 tons; for the first eight months, 287,500 tons.

The army communique emphasized the activity of German submarines during April in the Norwegian campaign, implying that this might account in part for the drop.

The hign command also announced the sinking Saturday of two enemy merchantmen "and, off Narvik, a former Polish destroyer.

Twenty-three Allied submarines have fallen victim to German "minesweepers, patrol boats, submarine chasers, and patrol planes," since April 9, the day of the opening of the Scandinavian campaign, the high command communique asserted.

U-Boats Rush To Arctic

Stockholm, Sweden, May 5 (U.P.).—Large numbers of German submarines were reported rushing into northern Norwegian waters tonight for an attack on British and French transports pouring troops into the Narvik battle front 200 miles above the Arctic circle.

German sources here said the high command believed that the combined action of the Nazi airforce and U-boat fleet might be successful in breaking British naval control in northern Norway.

The Germans were reported using bases in the Trondheim and Namsos fjords.

F. H. Clausen Announces Senate Candidacy

Horicon, Wis., May 5 (AP).—Fred H. Clausen announced today that lican nomination for the United he was a candidate for the Republican nomination for the United States Senate. A former vice president of the United States Chamber of Commerce, Clausen is making his first bid for public office outside his home town.

Flying Fish's Radioman Here, Tells How Nazis Took Bergen

Officer Describes Germans Who Boarded The Freighter in Norway as 'Polite, But Out for Nothing but Business'

By Scott Hart
A Staff Correspondent

John Alexander Clark, radio officer of the freighter Flying Fish that lay at a Bergen dock when the Germans invaded Norway, said here yesterday the Germans displayed no surliness, but were all very courteous and efficient. He arrived in New York Friday.

J. A. CLARK

Reminiscing at the home of his aunt, Mrs. Robert W. Baker, 1827 Jefferson place northwest, Clark said he was awakened in the early morning of April 9 by the opening of his cabin door and the entry of four German soldiers, one an officer.

The officer moved to the bunk, clicked his heels and extended his hand. He told Clark, in perfect English, not to use his radio. "I was surprised at seeing them and at first thought they might be Norwegians," he remembered.

"Nicest Kind of Guests"

He arose, and thinking of the amenities, offered the soldier a cigarette. The German declined conversation and refused the cigarette. "They were polite, and out for nothing but business," Clark said.

"They were courteous on shore as well. The Norwegians and all agree on that." The Norwegians, he said, commented, too, on how fine looking the soldiers were. A citizen who had German officers billeted in his home remarked that "they are the nicest kind of guests."

After the city was occupied, the German soldiers relaxed somewhat and talked about the matter, Clark recalled. They were very pleased that the opposition had been so slight. Asked about their sentiments toward the invasion, one soldier told Clark, "It is my job."

"It was so efficiently conducted that it appeared like a circus unloading in a town," the radio man said. "The first day, the stores closed, but the next day reopened, with the windows boarded up against possibility of being hit by shell fragments. Each afternoon at 2 o'clock the Germans held a public band concert and the citizens went there to listen.

Officer Gets Best Chair

"The soldiers went to the public halls and drank beer, paying for it with Norwegian money. The only 'heil' I heard was in a hotel lobby. Then a group of officers rose from their chairs when a higher officer entered and cried, 'Heil.' They remained standing until he was seated in the best chair."

Again, in a public place where German officers and a group of Norwegian men were sitting, the Norwegians were listening to a British broadcast, Clark related. A German officer rose, went to hte radio and switched on a German station. One of the Norwegians walked to the radio and switched it back to the British broadcast. Up jumped the German and switched it back to the German station. When the broadcast was finished, Clark continued, the German rose and turned the dial back to the British station; then he bowed, and said, "Thank you."

No Knowledge of Destination

Clark does not believe that the British airman fired a machine gun burst on the deck of the Flying Fish, an incident which has aroused a controversy among the crew members. Clark says that the plane did fly directly toward the freighter and that .30-caliber bullets struck the decks, but he thinks they might have been fired from other quarters than the plane. This, he said, was more likely, because the force of the bullets was spent when reaching the ship, and would not have been had they come from the not too distant guns on the plane.

He was told by German soldiers that they had no knowledge of their destination when they started for Norway. Some of them believed they were heading for Holland.

Clark is a son of Col. J. A. Clark U. S. A., retired. He returned last night to New York and his ship.

Daughter Wakes Parents to Fire

The 14-year-old daughter of Mr. and Mrs. E. D. Glassford, 211 Baltimore avenue, Takoma Park, Md., awakened her parents early yesterday morning when she smelled smoke from a blaze that did an estimated $500 damage to the home.

Believing the fire was in the chimney, the family sat in the living room until members of the Takoma Park Volunteer Fire Department arrived and discovered the blaze had eaten into most of the partitions.

Firemen fought the blaze for two hours.

Nazi Troops Regain Roros In Bomb Raid

Civilians Scatter To Hills in Panic, Escape Casualties

By Francis McEachen
United Press Staff Writer

Roros, Norway, May 5 (By telephone to Stockholm). — German troops reoccupied this mountain town 50 miles southeast of Trondheim today after a bombing attack that blasted the center of the town and drove civilians to the hills in panic.

The Germans' occupation came at 1 p. m., without the firing of a shot. Not a single Norwgeian soldier or gun remained.

The bombing of the civilians apparently was a reprisal for the killing of 40 or 50 German soldiers by Norwegian farmer guerillas in the vicinity of Os, 6 miles south along the Oosterdal (valley), as the Nazis' motorized columns closed in upon the town from the north and south.

The German advance to Roros was led by only 25 or 35 soldiers on motorcycles, entering from the south.

During the bombing attack, which came without warning, the 2,000 civilians fled to the hills toward the Swedish border.

At 9 a. m., a German bomber swept over the undefended town and dropped seven bombs most of which smashed into the main street creating panic among men, women and children on their way to church.

Many were thrown to the ground, but none was killed and the only casualty of the German occupation was a Nazi soldier, who fell from his motorcycle and broke his leg.

The Norwegians refrained from any attempt to defend Roros because they had heard that the Germans had taken 20 hostages—prominent citizens of the town of Os—and would kill them if there was any resistance.

The Nazi commanders also were said to have issued an "eye-for-an-eye" warning, threatening to kill one civilian for every German soldier killed by civilians.

Wooden houses along the main street of this mountain town were shattered by the bombing attack, power lines ripped down and the town's main department store was demolished by two direct hits.

The reaction of the people was pitiful. Completely unprepared for such an attack, they ran up and down the street in complete disorder. None knew exactly where he was going, but the first thought of every man, woman and child was the hills.

The 2,000 civilians of Roros' normal population of 2,500 had not a single bomb shelter, and authorities had attempted to save them from such an att attack by keeping Roros undefended.

Five of the seven bombs dropped on the town landed in the main street, broken glass was spread everywhere. Damage was enormous.

Exiled by 'King of Dudes' Title, Berry Wall, 80, Dies in France

Victor of 'Battle Of Fashions' in 1888 Passes in Monte Carlo

By International News Service

Paris, May 5.—Berry Wall, 80, history maker in the male fashion world and a colorful figure on the French Riviera, died today at the Monaco Hospital at Monte Carlo.

An exile in plaids—his favorite mode of dress—for 40 years, he was believed to have abandoned America because of resentment for the derisive title hung on him in New York City—"King of the Dudes."

He died of euremia after a serious attack three days ago. To the end he was a dashing figure whose flamboyant costumes made heads turn on the boulevards of Paris and at the fashionable watering places on the Riviera.

Wall must have seemed like a character out of another era as he adhered to his striking plaid box coats, high, cutting collars, tightly fitted trousers, long, curled mustache and high beaver toppers.

His wife was the former Lomie Melbourne, of Washington, D. C., descendant of an old Southern family. He was devoted to her and was deeply moved by her death last year. Ever since, his friends had been pleading with him to return to America. He refused but he continued to guard his United States citizenship jealously.

Wall's first notoriety because of his dress came in the early 1880's and reached a peak when he engaged in a "battle of fashions" with Bob Hilliard, an actor of the period. Wall won the battle when he strutted into the Hoffman House in New York City during the blizzard of '88 clad in costly, gleaming boots of black patent leather that reached to his hips.

Wall's box coats were of the brightest plaids, with buttons as big as saucers. His trousers fitted tightly and showed the contour of his calves. His hat was always silk, high and handsome. His moustache drooped but curled at the ends.

But his real gift of self-expression was in his collar—stiff, straight affair which came up to his ears and struck out in two points so high that it kept his chin elevated.

Wall's love for champagne was a legend in Parisian society. One of his boasts was that in 60 years he had never known the taste of water. Morning, noon and night his only drink was champagne.

For all his passion for gaudy raiment, he became an arbiter of style and fashionable New York tailors dispatched scouts to report details of his imported waistcoats and cravats whenever he appeared at a social function.

Wall and his wife came here in 1912. Their dinners at the Ritz were season highlights. Members of the royal houses of Europe were frequent guests.

Red Cross Stresses War Relief Needs

plies for units of the Norwegian Red Cross.

"It is extremely difficult to get help to Norway, because of blockade of ports and because of the fighting."

Germany's invasion of Norway caused complications in relief for other countries.

"Three ships with supplies for Finland, to be trans-shipped across Norway, returned to New York because the Germans came into Norway before the ships unloaded," Davis said.

The goods are now being put on Finnish steamers to go directly to Finland.

"No one can predict what the situation in Norway will be. But it is believed that a food shortage may develop, because it is a great food-importing country."

Although the spotlight has shifted to Scandinavia, distress in Central Europe still pleads for help, it was pointed out.

"We are perfecting arrangements to begin sending individual packages, with supplemental rations and clothing, to Polish prisoners of war in Germany," Swift said. "Approximately 300,000 of these men are there now. Prisoners of war always need extra food."

Swift headed a Red Cross commission which went abroad last Fall to survey needs. He saw Polish soldiers "in a miserable condition" in internment camps in Hungary. He saw throngs of people having to be fed at soup kitchens in Warsaw and seeking shelter in window-less shells of buildings.

"Approximately 250,000 persons are still being fed by soup kitchens in Warsaw, with various Red Cross societies sharing in the task," Swift said.

The people of the United States have given approximately $800,000 in cash for Red Cross relief to war sufferers in addition to approximately $200,000 in conuributed supplies. One manufacturer gave 1,000,000 cakes of soap, estimated at $66,000, he said. The Red Cross has given about $650,000 out of its own funds, and chapters have obtained surgical dressings and garments valued at $400,000 for materials alone.

"The opportunity for the United States to assist will constantly increase," Swift said, but added that it had not been decided whether a national appeal would be launched.

Malcolm Davis said " the end of the situation, no one can foresee. Undoubtedly it will get worse before it gets better. Actual war expenditures are so heavy for the European countries that relief and rehabilitation must be thought of in terms of what the United States can do."

Italy Lacks War Resources, Report Says

Nation Vulnerable To Allied Attack, Survey Declares

Italy not only is vulnerable to Allied attack, both in Europe and its colonies, but "its economic resources are inadequate for a major war," the Foreign Policy Association declared in a report published tonight.

The report, prepared by Robert Gale Woolbert, said that should Italy record this as an opportune moment to strike at the Allies, it could cut east-west communications through the Mediterranean, and probably effect a quick landing of considerable forces in Greece.

Such a move, the report said, would be supported by a land attack from Albania. Success of such a stroke it was said, would make it difficult for the Allies in the Near East to replenish supplies of men and materials from the west, although they still would maintain communications with the French and British empires farther east.

United States Pressure Reported

Publication of the report coincided with indications from State Department officials that the United States is bringing pressure not only on Italy but upon all European nations to prevent spread of war to Italy and the Balkans.

Pressure on neutrals was believed to be largely economic. It is said to have been pointed out repeatedly and forcefully to Italy and other European states that hostilities in the Mediterranean promptly would close that route to vital American supplies and transport.

As was the case three weeks ago when Germany invaded Norway, President Roosevelt and Secretary of State Cordell Hull were away from the Capital last night. The President is in Hyde Park, N. Y., and Hull is resting at Atlantic City.

Italy's Vulnerability

In commenting on Italy's vulnerability, Woolbert said:

"Were Italy located on the open ocean, like Britain and Japan, its deficiencies in food, fuel and raw materials might be alleviated by overseas imports.

"But as long as Britain is in a position promptly and effectively to close the exits of the Mediterranean, Italy can not rely on any supplies that must pass Gibraltar or through the Suez Canal."

The report said that Great Britain, by sending its battle fleets to the eastern Mediterranean, presumably was seeking to restore Allied supremacy in that area. It is estimated that the British Mediterranean fleet probably has not been weakened since the summer of 1939 when it was composed of 4 capital ships, 1 aircraft carrier, 6 cruisers, 39 destroyers, 7 submarines and 6 motor torpedo boats.

French Squadron

The French Mediterranean squadron contained only 2 old capital ships, but had 12 heavy destroyers and 9 cruisers in addition to a large complement of smaller destroyers and submarines.

"Italy, whose entire naval strength is concentrated in the Mediterranean and Red seas, has four pre-World War capital ships, two of which have been completely refitted. The Italians are building four new battleships of 35,000 tons—the Littorio, Vittorio Veneto, Impero and Roma—of which only the first two will be ready in the near future.

"In cruisers with 6-inch guns, the Italian navy has a slight margin over the French, but in torpedo craft (including destroyers) and submarines it is far in the lead. With the destruction of part of the German navy, however, the British may be able to transfer some Atlantic units to the Mediterranean."

Wahingtonians to Seek Cave Where Forebear Slew Panther

Killing of Beast in Cedar Creek Valley 79 Years Ago Was Regarded as One Of Mightiest Hunting Exploits of the Day

A Washingtonian and his son will travel 100 miles Sunday in search of a cave where an ancestor in 1861 slew a panther.

Alonza N. Whittington, of 1738 Potomac avenue southeast, and his son, Joseph, will start out on that day for Cedar Creek Valley, near Strasburg, Va., to find the spot where 79 years ago Adam Rudolph pulled off what was considered one of the mightiest hunting exploits of his day.

The feat received wide publicity at the time because the panther had terrorized inhabitants of Cedar Creek Valley. Adam and a colleague finally decided to end the reign of terror and tracked the animal to a cave in nearby Paddy Mountain.

According to the story of the episode, which appeared in Harper's Magazine around that time, Adam was forced to hang suspended over a ledge in order to shoot the panther.

The Whittingtons recently came into possession of the magazine article and were inspired to search for the cave for sentimental reasons. Young Joseph, a night school student at Hine Junior High School, will act as official photographer on the trip. At Strasburg three other descendants of Adam Rudolph will join the expedition: Thomas Whittington, a brother of the Washington man, and Lewis and Clarence Wood, grandsons of Adam.

The Whittingtons announce they will consider any volunteers who may wish to join the expedition.

Body of Infant Found in River

The body of a new-born boy was found floating in the Anacostia River just off the sea wall late yesterday afternoon.

Morgue officials said there were no identifying marks.

Crittenton Home To Hold Open House

The Florence Crittenton Home will hold an open house and inspection tour this afternoon from 3 to 6 o'clock for its friends and supporters, including Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt, the Community Chest announced yesterday.

The open house is being sponsored by the board of managers of the home, said Mrs. Thornton Owen, head of the agency's open house committee.

Contract Bridge

The object of today's haid, taken from the World Bridge Oylmpic, is for North to win nine tricks at three no trump. How would you do it? The solution, as offered by the Olympic committee, follows.

SOUTH DEALER

NORTH: ♠ 9 6 4 ♡ K 9 5 ♢ K 6 4 ♣ A K 7 4
WEST: ♠ K J 2 ♡ Q 10 7 3 ♢ Q 10 8 5 ♣ 10 9
EAST: ♠ Q 10 8 5 ♡ 8 6 2 ♢ J 7 ♣ J 6 5 2
SOUTH: ♠ A 7 3 ♡ A J 4 ♢ A 9 3 2 ♣ Q 8 3

The bidding:

1 ♢	Pass	2 NT.	Pass
3 NT.	Pass	Pass	Pass

Opening lead: 5 ♠

"The whole point in the play is to avoid risking the heart finesse. The spade ace is held up until the third round. Declarer can then try the clubs, and when they fail to break he may try ducking a diamond into West's hand. But the diamonds fail to break also. After cashing all minor suit tops, declarer simply puts West in with the third or fourth diamond, and West has to lead heart into the tenace."

D. C. Holdup Men Imprison Two, Steal Cash, Suits

Two men were held captive by robbers here yesterday, one by bandits who drove him to his apartment which they ransacked after tying him with some of his own neckties.

Edward A. Heffernan, 2701 Cortland place northwest, told police he was parking his automobile in the 2700 block of Devonshire place northwest when two men, brandishing a revolver, forced him into a black sedan. They drove him to his apartment, he said, tied him up and made off with six suits and two overcoats.

Another motorist, James A. Flaherty, of 4413 Warren street northwest, lost a watch and $75 to a pair of colored men who held him up at Forty-fourth and Van Ness streets northwest. Flaherty told police the bandits forced him to drive to Florida and Connecticut avenues, where they left the car and fled afoot.

Military Engineers To Convene Today

The Society of American Military Engineers will hold its annual meeting here today in the Willard Hotel to catch up on quick changes brought by war abroad.

Brig. Gen. George V. Strong, assistant chief of staff; M. J. Gormley, executive assistant to the Association of American Railroads, and James G. McDonald, president of the Brooklyn Institute of Arts and Sciences, will speak.

Ringside Table

GLENN MILLER, generally rated as the country's No. 1 swing bandsman, will bring his orchestra to the Riverside Stadium on Thursday, May 16, for one night of dance music. The Miller engagement will be the first of a series of notable band appearances at Riverside during the summer. Arrangements have been made to quickly convert the big place into an open air pavilion for these events.

Miller and his 17-piece band will play from 10 p. m. until 2 a. m. at the party on May 16. There'll be door prizes and contests, also plenty of seats for those who prefer listening to dancing.

"IMAGINATION" was the tune that seemed to fascinate Secretary of the Navy Charles Edison and Mrs. Edison as they sat in the Mayflower Lounge the other eve. Or perhaps the Secretary was doing some imagination of his own, seeing in his mind's eye an armada of turtle-backed battle wagons capable of defying any areial bomb ever made.

ROVING STARS. The Troika and the Ambassador Hotel, as well as the National Theater, were ports of call last night for the celebrities who joined in the all-star show for the Actors' Benefit Fund. The stars dined at the Ambassador before the show, partied at the Troika later. Vivien Leigh and Laurence Olivier, now the world's most famed Romeo and Juliet, gave highly prized compliments to the Troika floor show and emcee Lee Kerry for the part they played in the night club scene at the National.

ARE YOU INSANE? If you're not sure about your mental poise, just ask Guy Richardson, handwriting expert of the Rainbow Room. He says that handwriting infallibly reveals if a person is "teched in the haid." We'd rather not reveal what he told us about our scribbles.

THE NEW REVUES. Shoreham. Doraine and Ellis, lyric soprano and tenor, head the new Blue Room revue. They're both young and versatile, will feature capsule versions of light operas. Motter and Davis, the strong-arm boys, are back again. Francita, the radiant "radium girl," remains for another week.

Lotus. New whirls in dance exotics will be shown by Nixon and Andre in this week's "Fashionette Revue." Ethel Lynn, the topsy-turvy dancer, remains. Songs by Buddy Shaner, rhythms by the Continental Trio and Bill Strickland's Dixielanders.

Casino Royal. The "Dance Cocktails" begin a special and limited one-week engagement today. There'll be a group of novelty acts, too, including dancers Morris and Sterling and acrostepper Margie Mae.

YOUNG "OLD" BESTOR. Don Bestor, now leading his band in the Metronome Room, is still a young fellow, but he's one of the oldest of "name" orchestra directors. He built up a big reputation in the Midwest, but didn't invade Manhattan until 1931 when he went to the Hotel New Yorker. From there on he traveled far and fast.

SMART MUSICAL BOYS. Bernie Carroll, leader at the Fat Boy, has a musical typewriter. (No, we don't mean that it plays. It has music symbols on the keys.) Bernie uses it to make arrangements . . . Harry Klee, of Paul Kain's Glen Echo orchestra, is a verra, verra good friend of Olivia de Havilland. And that's a verra smart trick . . . Singer Russ Cullen, of the Pall Mall Room, is also a painter. You should see the beautiful job he did on his house over in Arlington . . . Tommy Johnson, Robin Hood's organist, has successfully remained a bachelor—so far . . . Anchor Room's Matt Windsor led an 18-man orchestra in the Brooklyn Apollo Theater at the first theater broadcast in the country . . . Mayfair's Lyle Smith plays "Happy Birthday" for everybody whether it's their birthday or not. We've had ten birthdays since Lyle came to town.

"APPLE PIE AND COFFEE" was the first English phrase that Abie Thevenet, pianist with Angelo di Bella's band at the Lido, learned after he landed in New York. Senor Thevenet vows that he lived on apple pie and coffee for two weeks until he learned to say "Ham and eggs, plizz."

FIRST FIFTY CENTS. Pete Macias, head rhythm man at the Lounge Riviera, netted 50 cents on his first musical engagement. He and another boy grabbed off a one-night drum playing job for $8. They paid $7 to hire a set of drums, divided up the dollar profit.

HISTORY IS MADE AT NIGHT. No wonder La Salle Versailles has an international atmosphere. Years ago it was the Peter Pan Tea Room, run by Britishers. Then it was the

Mount Vernon Place Church Lays Stone

Every Department Takes Part in Rites For $120,000 Building

Every department of Mount Vernon Place Methodist Church, from the nursery to the board of trustees, yesterday helped lay the cornerstone of its new $120,000 educational building at Massachusetts avenue and Ninth and K streets northwest.

A representative of each unit briefly told what the new building would mean to the organization, and placed a memento in the cornerstone box.

Shortly after Bishop Charles C. Selecman, of the South Central Jurisdiction of the Methodist Church, led the worshipers in the words of formal dedication, little Emily Rustin blond-haired daughter of Dr. John W. Rustin pastor, dropped the nursery unit's envelope into the box.

One Minute Each

Also "speaking their pieces," limited to one minute were Dr. Clifton F. Clark, superintendent of the church school; Miss Marjorie Jones, head of the children's division; James L. Hudson, Mrs. Ashland F. Harlan, John Brayshaw, Miss Ethel Nunn, class teachers and presidents; chairmen of recreation, dramatic, social welfare, missions, Christian education committees, and others.

Former Secretary of Commerce Daniel C. Roper, a Methodist laymen, reminded that the structure, first of its kind to rise recently in the downtown area, was being erected for the development of character and stability.

Judge Black Speaks.

Messages also came from Henry G. Thomas, church treasurer; Judge Eugene Black, chairman of the fiance committee of the church; Arthur E. Martin, chairman of the new structure's building committee, and from religious leaders of the downtown section.

They were Dr. William S. Abernethy, president of the Washington Ministrial Union and Calvary Baptist pastor; Dr. Edward Hughes Pruden, First Baptist cleric and president of the Washington Federation of Churches; Dr. Howard Stone Anderson, pastor of First Congregational Church, and others.

Col. A. L. Brindley, chairman of the board of trustees, made the formal presentation to Dr. Rustin.

Bishop Edwin Holt Hughes, resident prelate of the Methodist Church, spoke at last night's regular services, and Bishop Selecman during the morning. Both left the Methodist Conference in Atlantic City to take part.

GOP, New Deal Trios Debate On Spending

New Deal advocates last night defended the Administration's spending program and asserted their willingness to spend even more to give employment to the Nation's 10,000,000 jobless.

At the same time Republican critics charged that the spending was bringing no results and demanded instead policies encouraging industry to absorb the idle workers.

Participating in one of the most spirited American Forums of the Air debates, broadcast from the Willard Hotel via WOL, were three New Deal spokesmen, Senator James M. Mead, of New York; Senator Josh Lee, of Oklahoma, and Representative Jerry Voorhis, of California, and three Republican foes of the spending program, Senator John H. Townsend, of Delaware; Representative Robert F. Rich, of Pennsylvania, and Representative John M. Vorys, of Ohio.

Townsend Cites Debt

Senator Townsend led the Republican attack with a declaration that the New Deal in eight years had created a debt of $22,500,000,000, equaling the debt created during the previous 144 years of American Government. This deficit, he said, is enough to buy the estimated tangible wealth of Maryland, Kentucky, West Virginia, Maine, Vermont, Washington, Montana, New Mexico, Wyoming and Delaware.

"Yet," maintained the Deleware Senator, "there are still more than 10,000,000 unemployed today. Agricultural surpluses and low farm prices are still with us. Private residential building has declined 60 per cent, 83,000 firms which survived the depression year of 1932 failed, new capital investment has dropped from nearly $4,000,000,000 a year to less than $500,000,000.

"You cannot appropriate yourself out of a depression. You cannot spend your way, on Government borrowed money, into prosperity.

Townsend accused the Administration of increasing Federal cost through "unnecessary" expenses, and insisted great saving could be effected through Federal economy. He scored "squandering" over more than a billion dollars for foreign silver "which no other government wants" and a tariff policy which allowed the importation of "billions worth" of competitive farm products.

"The road we must travel is clear," Townsend emphasized. "We must reduce Government spending. We must reduce taxation. We must encourage through such public policies a resumption of private spending. We must stop giving our wealth to foreigners for things we do not need."

Senator Mead defended the New Deal program as "spending for human betterment." He asserted the spending program substantially advanced the national income, doubled Federal revenues, saved millions of citizens from want and privation, "bailed out of utter helplessness the financial, industrial and commercial enterprises of the Nation."

"We conquered the depression," said Mead. "We embarked on a great social and economic rehabilitation program; we invested a great sum of money in this supreme endeavor to restore economic order, to initiate a recovery program, to eliminate widespread insecurity and social maladjustment."

Despite "mounting prosperity," Mead warned, the New Deal spending policy must continue in order to take care of the unemployed, which private industry "under the most favorable circumstances cannot absorb."

In the discussion period that followed, debaters and panel strafed each other with statistics on prosperity and depression.

Republican Representative Vorys asserted that the New Deal was laboring under a fallacy that wealth was produced whenever the Government spent money. Democrat Voorhis, of California, however, insisted that Government spending also aided consumption keep in step with production. It certainly was the duty of the Government to utilize its unused credits toward employing idle manpower and equipment, the West Coast New ealer added.

Willing to Spend More

When Vorys and Rich demanded to know whether the New Dealers were willing to spend $14,000,000,000 to give jobs to all unemployed, instead of the present one out of five ratio, Senator Lee and Representative Voorhis responded that they were willing to do so if it was necessary.

When the question was turned on them, the Republican speakers retorted that industry would take care of the unemployed if properly encouraged by the Federal Government.

Senator Lee cut in to remark: "You can't feed the employed with a balanced budget."

Theodore Granik, Washington columnist, presided.

Rev. R. J. Plumb Takes Pulpit Of St. Mark's

Father of Rector Watches as Bishop Installs Son

The Right Rev. Charles Fiske, retired bishop of the Central New York Diocese, yesterday installed the Rev. Robert J. Plumb as rector of St. Mark's Episcopal Church on Capitol Hill. It was once the procathedral of Washington.

Early in the service, the Rev. Mr. Plumb received the keys of the church from Morris E. Marlow, junior warden, acting in place of Maj. Joseph Wheat, senior warden, who is ill.

Bishop Fiske, acting for the Right Rev. James E. Freeman, Bishop of Washington, recovering from a sprained ankle, presented the Rev. Mr. Plumb with letters of institution, the canons of the Episcopal Church and of the Washington Diocese, a Bible and prayer book.

Assisting in the rites, witnessed by more than 400 worshipers, was the Rev. John F. Plumb, executive secretary of the diocese of Connecticut, and father of the new rector.

Big Names

Middle Initials Count In Oklahoma Election

By the Associated Press

Oklahoma City, May 5.—An Oklahoma voter certainly has to know his candidate's full name, because "shadow" filing have thrown the primary campaign into somewhat of a turmoil.

The splurge of "famous" and "shadow" name candidates hit a peak two years ago, when the ballot listed such candidates as "Mae West," "Daniel Boone," and "Oliver Cromwell."

In 1932 a school teacher, Will Rogers, ran for Congressman-at-Large. His chances were considered so slim that his vote wasn't tabulated at first. But Oklahoma is the home of the late Will Rogers, philosopher and humorist, and the schoolteacher was elected by an overwhelming majority.

This year, William H. Murray, former Governor, filed against Representative Rogers and then, in the last hours of filing Saturday, William A. Murray, farmer, entered the race.

There's still more confusion to this contest. Another Will Rogers, draftsman, is in the running; Josh Lee, carpenter, whose name is the same as the State's junior Senator, has entered and so has an Elmer Thomas, whose name is the same as that of Oklahoma's senior Senator.

The list of candidates for corporation commissioner includes three other Shaws besides the incumbent, A. S. J. Shaw, who seeks reelection. They are L. H. Shaw, farmer, and A. F. Shaw and A. M. Shaw, merchants.

But that isn't all. There are two Armstrongs—William J. and William A. There's a Brigham Young, too.

To cap the whole thing, a last minute filer for the corporation commission was—Will Rogers.

War Perils U. S. Democracy, C. U. Dean Warns

The war abroad and threats against the preservation of America's democracy carry a tremendous challenge to Catholic men and women, the Very Rev. Ignatius Smith, O. P., warned yesterday at Catholic University.

Dean of the school of philosophy of the university, he delivered the sermon at solemn high mass in the Shrine of the Immaculate Conception, celebrating the tenth anniversary of the Catholic University Conference of Clerics and Religious of the Catholic Students' Mission Crusade.

More than 1,300 worshipers, including members of various religious houses of the university, student and veteran units of the Mission Crusade, and others were told that, no matter who wins in Europe, the war's repercussions will be felt in every hamlet and village in the world.

Religious Freedom Cited

The priest referred to the privileges of religious freedom enjoyed in America, contrasted with abroad, where, he said, men "slink furtively" to worship, and churches are being destroyed.

He urged prayers of gratitude for the American form of government, and that it may improve not only for economic and social security, but for the land's spiritual well-being. It is our responsibility to keep the spiritual foundations secure, he said.

Reviewing a decade's progress of the Conference, Father Smith, who ten years ago was chairman of the rally marking its foundation, recalled achievements in mission support, peace and through its Church Unity Octave, Speaker's Bureau, Archdiocesan oratorical and poster contests and other activities.

Father Smith read a congratulatory message from the Right Rev. Msgr. Edward A. Freking, of Cincinnati, secretary-treasurer of the Mission Crusade.

The Right Rev. Monsignor Louis C. Vaeth, Archdiocesan director of the Society for the Propagation of Faith, was celebrant of the mass; the Rev. Philip J. Kirrane, S. S. J., deacon; the Rev. Samuel J. Mathews, S S. J., sub-deacon, and Brother Andrew Lawrence, MS. SS. T., master of ceremonies.

Friars of Holy Name College of the university served as minor officers, and the Augustinian College choir sang the mass. The crusaders' pledge was recited. Among the guests were the Right Rev. Msgr. Edward L. Buckey, rector of St. Matthew's Cathedral, and the Right Rev. Msgr. George Barry O'Toole, professor of philosophy at the university.

Msgr. Vaeth presented the following awards: Archbishop's cross, Dr. Joseph Fenton, assistant faculty adviser and professor of sacred theology at Catholic University; Frater Timothy Donahoe, S. A., president of the Clerical Conference; Frater Donald O'Callaghan, O. Carm., treasurer; Frater Avertanus Howe, O. Carm., and Frater Theophane Murphy, S. A.

Facing Heavy Weather

Only a short time ago Neville Chamberlain was boasting that Hitler had "missed the bus" and Winston Churchill was proclaiming the Nazi invasion of Norway to be "as great a strategic and political error as that committed by Napoleon when he invaded Spain."

Because of the speedy and humiliating denouement of the Allied campaign in Norway, however, these and similar outbursts of optimism by members of the British cabinet have boomeranged. A storm of denunciation now rages around the heads of Premier Chamberlain and his colleagues. They are charged with having failed to prosecute the war on the northern front with the necessary vigor and dispatch and thus with primary responsibility for the tragic fiasco which has seriously reduced the prestige of the Allies throughout Europe and the world.

As yet, there are no indications that the hue and cry will lead to the downfall of Premier Chamberlain. He has, in the past, survived other crises, although none as serious as this. It appears probable that he will again weather the storm. The reluctance of the British people and particularly the Conservative members of Parliament to swap horses while crossing a turbulent stream will work in his favor as will, also, the circumstance that the opposition is itself so bereft of able leadership as to be in no position adequately to replace the present government.

Nonetheless it seems unlikely that the cabinet will emerge from the crisis unscathed and unchanged. British public opinion is so embittered by what has happened in Norway that scapegoats may have to be found. Mr. Chamberlain may find it necessary to sacrifice some of his present colleagues and in general to lighten up the government so as to make it a more effective instrument in line with the grave emergency which faces the Allies.

It is possible that one consequence of the Norwegian tragedy will be the creation in Great Britain of a real government of national union with dissident Liberals and Laborites taking places in the cabinet. In any event, a political shake-up appears to be in the making. And unless the British achieve an offsetting victory to counterbalance the succession of defeats suffered by the Allies, Mr. Chamberlain's position is certain to become precarious.

Employers' Unions

Almon E. Roth, president of the San Francisco Employers Council, probably administered a series of shocks to some of the more conservative businessmen who heard his address at one of the round tables of the United States Chamber of Commerce meeting last week.

Mr. Roth emphasized his belief that opposition to collective bargaining is futile. Furthermore, he argued that industry-wide bargaining has many advantages from the viewpoint of employers.

He asserted that, as shown by the experience of the Pacific Coast shipping industry, it is comparatively easy for a strong union to enforce its demands by successive strikes against single concerns. But it is far from easy for a union to support its membership if a strike is called against all employers with whom the union has a master contract.

Mr. Roth proceeded from his exposition of the merits of industry-wide agreements to discussion of the need for some form of employer organization to "strengthen the position of the average employer in such a realistic and unequal pressure game as collective bargaining." One is so accustomed to hearing about the disadvantages of labor in negotiations with employers that it is a novel experience to listen to serious discussion of the advantages, financial and otherwise, enjoyed by organized labor in its dealings with employers.

Mr. Roth himself now heads an Employers Council of over 1,700 members, in San Francisco, about half of whom represent industry-wide associations. San Francisco employers, he says, have taken a leaf from the book of organized labor and established their own "employers union."

Organizations of employers for consideration of trade problems of concern to all and for regulation of competition among themselves are institutions of long standing. But the bringing together of employers belonging to different industries for the sole purpose of presenting a united front to labor unions in a particular city is a development of a very different kind.

The intensification of economic class consciousness which such protective organizations foster has a very definite shadow side. Especially in a democracy, one hates to see such trends developing. But, as Mr. Roth sums up, "there will always be a fundamental divergence of interest between employers and employes over such matters as the proper division of the dollar which labor produces and the respective rights and prerogatives of management and labor."

Science's Bombardment

Current reports that scientists have uncovered a vast new source of energy are fantastic in many respects. The story of the mysterious U-235 is more like a dream come true than a scientific discovery. Yet this is an age of miracles. Men of the laboratory have accomplished so many seemingly impossible feats that we can no longer afford to be incredulous over even the turning of atoms into power.

Some steps in the process remain to be perfected. Unforeseen difficulties may arise. No one need concern himself about discarding his automobile until this newly isolated substance has been actually put to work on a large scale. Nevertheless, the experiments have gone far enough to suggest that 1940 may be the starting point of the greatest economic, industrial and social revolution the world has ever known.

This potential source of power appears to hinge upon the splitting of heavy uranium atoms and liberating their tremendous binding power. The splitting can be done by neutrons traveling at low energy. Neutrons may be slowed down for this purpose by protons which form the core of hydrogen atoms. Since water is two-thirds hydrogen, U-235 begins its seemingly magic performance when placed in cold water.

When one atom is split additional neutrons are released to attack other atoms, after being properly slowed down by cold water. Thus, scientists explain, the process of liberating the vast atomic energy within this substance becomes automatic. The surrounding water is turned into steam to drive any sort of machinery that man may devise. The process can be controlled by regulating the supply of cold water, and is said to be admirably suited to the development of power.

Apparently the weakest link in the process is the present difficulty of isolating U-235 in pure form. Two months ago that task seemed hopeless. Now samples have been isolated and tested, and the means of securing a larger yield of the substance, said to be abundant in many countries, have already been greatly improved. If substantial quantities can be extracted and put to work, the discovery would doubtless be the greatest achievement of science. For a pound of U-235 is said to yield 5,000,000 times the energy derived from the burning of a pound of coal.

Infinite possibilities arise out of this discovery. Should the "ifs" which now block practical application of U-235 power be removed, it could be used to lighten the work of the world and create boundless new wealth. But it would be extremely short-sighted to assume that all the results flowing from such a miracle would be constructive. U-235 could hasten a breakdown of our civilization as readily as it could bring universal prosperity.

First reports of this discovery come at a moment when large segments of the world are more interested in means of destruction than power to supply human wants. There is bitter irony in the reporters' comments that a few pounds of U-235 might be used to propel battleships and airplanes on extended death-dealing missions. Man's power to destroy would be enhanced in proportion to his power to create a better world.

Should this dream of boundless power come true, moreover, our first concern would be the tremendous dislocation it would bring in its wake. Some industries, such as coal mining and gasoline refining, might be virtually wiped out. Others would be revolutionized. Presumably the cost of power would be reduced to a fraction of what it is today. What, then, would human labor be worth?

It is plainly evident that such a new source of power would have to be controlled with intelligence, caution and deep understanding of human welfare. The vast power that can now be wielded by a few men has already brought the world to a sorry plight. What hope is there that a sudden drastic increase in the mechanical power would be turned to good advantage? The real question is not whether scientists can devise ways of making a thousand wheels turn where one has turned before, but whether the human race is equipped with the emotional restraints and mental capacity to manage such an intricate and potentially dangerous environment to its own advantage.

No amount of skepticism on this score will retard the remarkable advance of science. Nor is it desirable that it should. But it is certainly time for laymen everywhere to awake to the fact that science, in bombarding the atom, is also bombarding the world with a whole new set of social, economic and international problems.

The Mexican Reply

Reiterating previous assertions that the controversy over expropriation of American-owned oil properties is of purely domestic concern, the Mexican Government has flatly rejected Secretary Hull's proposal to submit claims for indemnity to arbitration. Mexico also refuses to accept a suggestion to appoint an umpire to deal with nonadjudicated claims for expropriated agricultural lands antedating 1927.

The note likewise weakly defends Mexico's failure to make any adjustments on foreign and railroad debts, long in default, in which American citizens are heavily interested. Negotiations for resumption of payments on these obligations were, it is alleged, suspended because a foreign boycott of Mexican oil, instigated by the oil companies, limited the possibilities of payment.

The unyielding character of the communication apparently closes the door to any satisfactory settlement of outstanding claims against Mexico.

The United States recognizes the legality of expropriation of American property by the Government of Mexico if provision is made for "adequate, effective and prompt compensation." Mexico is patently unable to offer adequate payments in cash or its equivalent for the seized oil properties. Hence the proposal to arbitrate called first for ascertainment of the amount of damages, and secondly for determination of means of assuring prompt payment.

In conformity with its declaration that the expropriation of the American oil companies is a domestic matter of no concern to the United States Government, Mexico has made a direct private agreement with the Sinclair group. Individual settlements of this sort plainly leave the companies at a disadvantage in negotiations. Moreover, there is always a possibility that concessions made to one group of claimants may be granted at the expense of others. Certainly the only way to assure equality of treatment is by means of a general settlement, as suggested by the Department of State.

In view of Mexico's stubborn refusal to admit the existence of an international issue there is little that the United States can do to secure fair treatment for American investors. Mexico should realize, however, that it is extremely short-sighted to confiscate the property of citizens of a comparatively wealthy neighboring country, particularly when that country buys large quantities of Mexican silver.

Our southern neighbor may find it immediately advantageous to effect individual settlements with American oil companies on dictated terms. But few Americans will hereafter have the foolhardiness to invest money in a country whose government seizes foreign-owned property in disregard of its obligations under international law to make prompt and adequate compensation.

Try Once More

The House District Committee has good reason for its reluctance to sponsor another local tax bill at the present session of Congress. Once the House refused to consider any District revenue legislation. Later it recklessly voted down both the proposed sales tax and amendments to the present income-tax law.

Still the fact remains that Washington's revenue system is in a state of confusion. The Court of Appeals has said that a resident of this city for 20 years is nevertheless domiciled in Massachusetts, and the present income tax is based on domicile in the District. A large number of Washingtonians who cling to the hope of some day returning to their native States do not know whether or not they are liable for payment of this levy.

Congress has an unquestioned responsibility to straighten out this tangle. Members of the House should at least be interested in saving their constituents living here from the necessity of contesting in the courts the payment of an uncertain tax. So long as Congress serves as a city council for Washington, moreover, it should not object to correcting a defective and discriminatory local tax law of its own making.

It is by no means certain that the House would react to the new Dirksen bill as it recently did to the Nichols sales-tax bill and the amendments offered by Mr. Dirksen from the floor. The new bill is simply intended to make the income-tax law workable, by applying it to persons living here (aside from the question of legal domicile) and those drawing income from the District. Such a reasonable amendment should be passed without difficulty if legislators will take time to acquaint themselves with its purpose.

The District Committee should not deny the House another opportunity to correct a blunder that would seriously reflect upon its reputation as a city council if left standing.

Another reason why it costs so much to live is because our neighbors are always buying something we can't afford.

"Honesty And Fairness"

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Please elucidate, J. W. Brandt, M. D., what brand of "honesty and fairness" you have in mind? There appear to be two brands of these commodities: One that is inherent to ordinary mortals and the other that is the exclusive property of exalted "Nordic-Aryan (slightly tainted with Japanese admixture), anti-Communist (slightly tainted by a certain "pact"), Nazi "race of supermen destined to become the rulers of the world."

It is the brand of honesty and fairness illustrated by the "protective" taking over of Bohemia and Moravia (for which, of course, the Czechs begged), particularly after the "peace" of Munich? Is it the brand of honesty and fairness illustrated by the "not-so-protective" taking over of Austria (for which, of course, the Austrians always begged)?

Is it the brand of honesty and fairness illustrated by the "ever-so-protective" taking over of Denmark (for which the Danes begged on bended knees)? What does a "non-aggression pact" between friends matter anyway? Is it the brand of honesty and fairness of the "over-protective" taking over (what does a little treason, bribery and debauchery of a small nation matter! They begged for protection) of Norway? Is it the brand of honesty and fairness of the "Reichstag fire," of the "British attempt on the 'divine leader'," of "documentary proof" of American complicity in "making wars?" and so on, ad infinitum?

Or is it the ordinary brand of "honesty and fairness" of humble mortals (not destined to enter the gates of Nazi Valhalla")?

"Divided Recreation"

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Your editorial in yesterday's Post, entitled "Divided Recreation," was interesting, but did not strike at the heart of the problem. I challenge your statements that the present coordinating attempts have broken down; that the Department of the Interior is not working along with the present coordinated program, and that the District Recreation Department does not entirely regulate the play program.

All of the above contentions can easily be proved false; however, a lack of space prevents doing so here. If you would use the Recreation Department as a stepping stone toward District reorganization, a more thorough investigation on your part would show that Congress is not appropriating sufficient funds for this work.

Other cities of comparable size not only have better equipment, but pay respectable salaries to employes. The present department is functioning remarkably well with its administrative program, but falls woefully short of the standards set up in other cities for salaries and equipment.

Until Congress takes cognizance of the fact that the District must have more money to operate its municipal departments, Washington will not be able to take its proper place as a model city.

"BOOST WASHINGTON."
Washington, May 1.

"Of Whole Cloth"

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: The recently announced alleged "discovery" by the German authorities of an alleged Franco-British plot to seize Scandinavian territory, just before the Germans themselves did it, seems to be pretty generally discounted as a gross distortion of the fact, if not a complete fabrication "out of whole cloth."

It may seem almost incredible that the official representatives of a great nation would deliberately stoop to such misrepresentation. And yet this is not the first, nor even the worst, example of a deliberate attempt on the part of the leaders of the Third Reich to mislead the people of the world.

In March, 1939, the leaders of the German government, in their official capacity, told the world that the Czech people, through their official representatives, President Hacha and Foreign Minister Chvalkovsky, had voluntarily and of their own initiative, placed themselves and all their affairs into the hands, and at the mercy of their avowed and traditional enemies, the Germans, who had never breathed anything but hatred and threats of destruction of the Czechs.

It is difficult to imagine a more patent lie, a more stupid and clumsy fabrication. Yet, in March of the present year, on the first anniversary of the occupation of Czecho-Slovakia by the Nazis, the latter repeated this story and even added to it by saying that the Czech people themselves, now after having experienced one year of Nazi rule, have recognized the wisdom of the action taken a year ago and regard it as best for themselves!

A government capable of such deception as this, is capable of almost anything along that line. And the entire record of the present German government is fully up to the standard set by the above.

For Dewey

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: According to the latest reports the old guard of the Republican Party is ganging up on Thomas E. Dewey to defeat his nomination. When did Gov. Landon, Mr. Knox, Mr. Hoover et al, get a mandate or even an excuse from the rank and file of the Republican Party to trade, bargain or sell out the nomination of Mr. Dewey?

It is because Mr. Dewey refuses to enter into deals that they are so afraid of him, they know they cannot handle him, and that is the best reason in the world why the common run of the party wants him nominated.

Why does the President keep throwing out nasty digs at Mr. Dewey? He knows that Mr. Dewey is the one and only man that can defeat himself or any other Democrat on the list; he knows that Dewey can poll more votes than any living American, hence his nasty temper. The fact that all of the prominent third termers are against Dewey ought to be all the answer any sensible Republican could ask for.

Let's have a square deal in the convention, for if any trickery is indulged in to defeat Dewey next November will furnish the answer.

Mr. Dewey at his age, and experienced in dealing with the worst, is a much better qualified man than many we have honored in the past. A man nowadays does not have to be over 40 years of age to know more than men knew 25 years ago at the age of 65 years. Young, keen, brilliant, cannot be bought, bluffed or scared by any combination of Presidential fury or old guard fixing.

Supports Borah's Foreign Policy

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Mr. Walter Lippmann's column in The Post of April 27 should be entitled not "The Death of a Theory," but "The Death of Walter Lippmann's Intellectual Integrity." His thesis that the Norwegian war has established the fallacy of what he calls, but the late Senator did not call, "isolationism," he supports by deliberately closing his eyes to the facts.

Even the scanty information now available seems to indicate that Norway's present difficulties arose because she abandoned the historic Scandinavian policy of complete neutrality. A two-paragraph news item appeared in the New York Times the same day we learned of Germany's invasion of Norway. Carrying a Toronto date line of April 8, the day before the invasion began, it quoted the Norwegian consul in Toronto as saying that he did not "feel bad about it at all" that the Allies were sowing mines in Norwegian territorial waters. "Norway will have to protest," he is quoted. "If she didn't, Germany would accuse her of being unneutral. But I have my own ideas about the nature of these protests between Norway and Britain."

If this remark by the Norwegian counterpart of Mr. James Cromwell reflects the attitude of the Norwegian government as truly as Mr. Cromwell's utterances reflect the attitude of our President and State Department, Norway was in no real sense neutral on the day she was invaded. Neutrality cannot be maintained by protests made for the benefit of the record.

The experience of Walter Hines Page, the American Ambassador at London during the World War, demonstrates this rather too clearly to require further comment. If any conclusions about American foreign policy are to be drawn from the Norwegian war it is the lack of wisdom of the completely perfunctory protests our Government is making against England's flagrant violations of American rights under international law.

Mr. Lippmann sees a parallel between a country adjoining Germany which has a population of less than 3,000,000 and the United States. We must, he maintained, treat wars not by "avoiding them" but by "preventing and resisting them." "Fighting," it might be pointed out to Mr. Lippmann, is less ambiguous than "resisting" when used in this connection.

Norway is in trouble, Mr. Lippmann tell us, because "the balance of power was upset from the outset by the Russian partnership with Germany and the American surrender of neutral rights upon the sea." The conclusion then is drawn that the security of the United States depends upon the balance of power in Europe and we must therefore maintain it.

This means that our only hope of security lies in playing England's game of "divide and rule," although it is the maintenance of the balance of power that has shed Europe's blood for centuries. Our destiny according to this theory is determined by secret treaties dividing the spoils of war which determine the outcome in the European struggles for power.

If Mr. Lippmann has drawn the picture correctly, the recent statement by the British Ambassador in Tokyo that Japan and Britain are "ultimately striving for the same objective" is a body blow to our security. We have become a pawn of European nations, and by failing to recognize our status we are jeopardizing our very existence, according to Mr. Lippmann's theory.

On the whole, Senator Borah's policy of avoiding war, which Mr. Lippmann deplores, offers somewhat more hope to the American people than Mr. Lippmann's policy. Indeed, it is not too strong a statement to say that Senator Borah's wisdom offers the only hope for the survival of our institutions and our democracy on this continent.

The Cliche Expert Gets A Job

"How d'y do, sir. My name is——"

"Don't tell me. You're looking for a job on the Middleburg Bugle, aren't you?"

"Correct, sir."

"Good. Now tell me—suppose as a reporter you found certain conditions that should be exposed. What would you do?"

"That's easy, sir. I'd simply turn the white glare of publicity on them!"

"Excellent. And if the white glare was not enough?"

"The pitiless light would, I think, then be justified."

"Amazing! Now. Suppose there was a robbery——".

"In the event of a theft, you mean, sir?"

"Right. The trespassers had——"

"Meaning, of course, sir, the prowlers or marauders?"

"Yes. The marauders had broken in——"

"Effected an entrance?"

"Correct. The marauders had effected an entrance, but while searching the safe they were suddenly come upon by the watchman. What then?"

"Easy, sir. One thug holds the watchman at bay at gunpoint while the other proceeds to rifle the safe."

"Good. And how is this rifling performed?"

"Leisurely."

"Excellent. What is the attitude of the watchman?"

"He is cowed by the display of force."

"What then?"

"The gunmen warn the watchman not to make an outcry, then make good their escape after scooping up most of the contents of the cash-drawer."

"Right. And in departing?"

"In their haste to leave they overlook $300 in bills in the safe."

"And included in the money they stole?"

"Was a heavy canvas bag containing $12.43 in pennies."

"What then?"

"There was a breathless silence for a moment as the watchman almost frightened out of his wits stood rooted to the spot.'

"Then?"

"Then the watchman, sadder but wiser, summoned official aid."

"And?"

"And the local constabulary threw out a dragnet in an effort to ascertain the whereabouts of the criminals."

"Go on."

"The culprits were later taken into custody and lodged in the city bastile."

"Excellent. Now, suppose you were sent on another assignment. Say, to a baseball game——"

"The great American pastime! Say, that reminds me of a story of colorful old Diz Deane. Ole Diz, it seems, was acting up in training camp, and——"

"Say, you were sent to a baseball game which was closely contested, and——"

"Pitchers' duel, or slugfest?"

"And in the ninth inning——"

"In the last stanza the opposing pitcher, a portsider, won his own game, putting the fracas on ice by lashing out a bingle against the rightfield palings."

"Incredible!"

"That reminds of a story of Dominic DiMag. It seems Dommie was——"

"On the whole, what could you say of the playing of the winning team?"

"I would say, sir, it was a star-studded performance."

"And of the winning pitcher?"

"In my book the colorful young twirler could always have a place."

"How about the losing pitcher?"

"A faithful old wheelhorse pitching against a batter who never strikes out—Father Time! That reminds me of a story about the Babe. It seems the Bambino——"

"Good! Know anything about book-reviewing?"

"I think I can say in all modesty, sir, that I have always read voraciously and I follow the reviews with avidity."

"Fine. What, for example, would you say about a book having to do with economics or foreign affairs?"

"Required reading!"

"Correct. What about an adventure book?"

"A picturesque book shot through with the stuff of romance."

"And an historical novel?"

"A rich tapestry, with fact and fiction intriguingly interwoven."

"Excellent. And a mystery story?" story?"

"Right."

"A thriller that will send cold chills up your spine!"

"What about a sociological novel?"

"Strong meat!"

"Suppose a book was written by a successful woman novelist?"

"A smoothly written opus, but peopled with stock, slick-paper characters."

"Suppose a rival book-reviewer should write a book?"

"A pleasant little book, wholly unpretentious and faintly engaging."

"Amazing! Forgetting books for a minute, do you know society writing?"

"Like a book, sir. I think I can say I am widely known in social circles."

"Good. Suppose someone had a party——"

"Entertained delightfully, sir?"

Right. Suppose the hostess paused to speak pleasantly to a guest?"

"The two were engaged in a jolly tete-a-tete."

"And if they became embroiled in a free-for-all?"

"There was a slight feeling of tension and some pointed remarks were made."

"Correct. But there is something you have omitted."

"You mean 'gay' and 'lovely,' sir? I was saving those for last."

"Unbelievable! Now, tell me—and I warn you, this is important—suppose the police have just found a man who has been slugged and there is a large lump on his head. With what has the man been struck?"

"An elementary question, sir. Only one thing could cause such an abrasion—a blunt instrument!"

"And the sound it made as it struck him?"

"Was, sir, a dull thud!"

"The job is yours, Mr., er—what did you say your name was?"

"Smith, sir, and thank you very much."

British Muddle

By Ernest Lindley

Last Battle Remains

MUDDLING is an old English habit. The adage to the effect that Britain always loses every battle except the last one is still at least 50 per cent true.

As to whether Britain will win the final battle of this war, official guessing in Washington varies. On the whole, it is not much more bearish about the prospects of the Allies now than it was before the Germans launched their invasion of Denmark and Norway.

The prevailing opinion still is that the Allies probably will be the ultimate victors. Odds on their success would have risen if they had prevented the Germans from consolidating their control of southern and central Norway. The failure of the belated and poorly organized Allied counter-attack has restored the odds to about where they were before the blitzkries in Scandinavia. Perhaps they have dropped a point or two lower, but not much more than that.

Hitler's thrust into Norway gives him air bases closer to Scapa Flow and Scotland. Potentially his submarines are brought closer to the northern part of the British Isles and their routes to the Atlantic shipping lanes is shortened. Fjords are hard to get out of as well as to get into, however. It remains to be demonstrated how effectively Hitler can use Norwegian bases for submarines in the face of Britain's naval superiority.

Despite these gains—and the supplies Hitler captured in Norway—many officials here regard the Norwegian venture as either feint or a German defensive measure. The feint hypothesis is that Hitler hoped to divert the attention of the Allies from the Low Countries, where his main thrust was to be. The defensive hypothesis is that he wanted to secure his northern flank, especially against air attack, before moving elsewhere.

AS A BASE for attack on British sea power or on British industry, Holland is many times more valuable than Norway. The view of some eminent aviation experts is that Hitler will not launch his long-awaited aerial war on England until he has seized Holland, or at least made the attempt to seize it, thereby greatly shortening the distance his planes would have to travel.

As a defensive measure, the Norwegian venture succeeded. As a feint it did not. The Allies apparently did not diminish their naval patrol off Holland. They withdrew no ships from the Mediterranean. Nor did they risk in Norway any considerable number of well-trained troops. They took a small gamble in the landing of expeditionary forces. But they did not pile up their stakes. Instead, when they found the cards stacked against them they withdrew, thus cutting the losses. They would not have wthdrawn, regardless of their actual and prospective losses, if they had regarded the Norwegian front as decisive.

Their net gain seems likely to be Narvik, which means the throttling down of iron exports from Sweden to Germany.

Their great loss is in prestige, especially among European nonbelligerents. This brings up a third theory: that Hitler's chief purpose in going into Norway was exactly to inflict a loss of prestige on the Allies, with the hope of cowing the remaining small neutral nations and of bringing Italy into the war on the German side. According to this theory, Hitler knows he cannot win the war unless he can induce other great armed powers to join him in the attack on the Allied empires. He must first induce either Italy or Russia to get into the war. Perhaps in time Japan would follow. At present he seems to be banking chiefly on Italy. The Russians probably learned a lesson from the Finns. Japan is occupied in China, and, not knowing what the United States might do, is hardly likely to undertake as yet any adventure by sea in the Pacific.

THUS, THE MAIN concern of the Allies and of our own Government now is to keep Italy from entering the war. The President has said that he is doing all he can to keep the war from spreading. All that he can do is probably inconsequential on the Atlantic side. If Mussolini can be bribed to stay out of the war or to enter it on the Allied side, the Allies have the bribes to offer—in loans and territorial concessions. If he can be forced to stay out, it will be by the Allied naval and military power.

It is easy to criticize the present British government as a huddle of tired, fumbling old men. Even Churchill seems to have been dozing when the Germans streaked into Norway. And the Germans have made him eat his vainglorious boast that they could not send reinforcements across the Skaggerak and that Norway would sap the Nazi strength as Spain sapped Napoleon's.

There are alert people in England. It is often said that the men who should now be governing England were buried in Flanders 25 years ago. The Germans also suffered heavy casualties in the World War, but somehow they seem to have leaders of enterprise and daring. As a student in England shortly after the World War I knew plenty of young Englishmen who were on their toes. Some of them had fought the war under butter-fingered cabinet ministers and blockheaded generals. In the end, they had won. With all their fumbling, the British have remarkable staying power and ability to concentrate on the main fronts.

Muddling must be set down almost as a constant factor in any appraisal of the chances of victory for the British in any war. The Norwegian setback has not by any means consumed the allowance for muddling which experienced observers in Washington had made in putting the odds on an ultimate Allied victory at somewhat more than even.

GEN. GOERING
His boast that his planes have "once and for all destroyed the myth of British mastery of the seas" may be propaganda dished up especially for Mussolini, it is suggested in an article by Barnet Nover

Fuss Over Tulips

THE GOTHAM park department has been having a small fuss over the conduct of 900,000 tulip bulbs which were presented to the City of New York by the Netherlands government, most of which have failed to tulip this spring. The park department says the bulbs got too hot or too cold on the way over, and the Dutch growers will have it that they were planted improperly. With the world in its present state this is no time to complicate relations between this country and the Netherlands over such a matter. This is once that your correspondent feels able to help.

The fact of the matter is that tulips aren't supposed to bloom. That is, your own tulips. Other people's tulips, yes. Yours, no! If one of your own tulips does bloom, that is just so much gravy. Your own are always planted upside down, or the moles got them, or the ground was too soggy, or too dry, or you put them in too early, or too late, or the frost reached them. It was a pretty hard winter in spots, and if it was the mildest winter in 30 years, why, that was only on the average.

IT WAS MILD on the average because there were so many sunny, springlike days toward the end, and so many lovely Indian summer days right up to Christmas which raised the average temperature. But don't forget that terrible cold spell along toward the end of January. That was what nipped your tulips. Other people's tulips were protected by a wall, or the lie of a hill, or they were covered by a thicker grade of mulch. That stuff you buy to cover tulips.

The tulip is a fairly reliable plant in the sense that you can put it in the ground and feel confident that when spring comes it will just stick up some twisted, greenish-brown leaves and then put out a stem with a little knob on the end which presently just falls over and doesn't do a damn thing. The Hollanders make an industry of tulips, but not for the blooms. They sell bulbs to the Americans, and they harvest the leaves and sell them to their neighbors, the Germans. Anybody who has ever smoked a German cigar knows what the Germans use the leaves for, just as anybody who has ever smoked a French cigarette knows what the thrifty French do with their hair combings.

THIS ISN'T the first time that the relations of Holland with another country have been embarrassed by the tulip. There was a period a long time ago when the whole world went crazy over tulip bulbs, which became a medium of gambling or speculation that led to a crash comparable to the collapse of the Florida boom or the panic of 1929. They sold bulbs for as much as $25,000 apiece, and companies were formed to buy one bulb.

A book tells of a disastrous incident in which an English sailor, sent ashore to deliver a present from his master to a Dutch merchant, and, being given a herring for his trouble, casually filched from the counter an object which he took to be an onion to eat with the herring. It was half gone when the Dutch merchant discovered his loss, and I don't just remember, but I think the ship owner lost a big lawsuit and the sailor got life. But, even so, if the bulb had been planted, the odds are hundred to one that it would have been put in upside down or the frost, or moles, or the damp would have got it, or it would have run all to German cigar leaf.

TULIPS DO NOT harm. They have their place in the world, but they are not in the habit of blooming any more than a wisteria which your correspondent mentioned a year or so ago, which was bred to a bull wisteria and even subjected to a delicate operation, but finally settled down to life of spinsterhood. It is just an old bag, but we left it hang around. Tulip keep commerce going between Holland and other countries, and if you think it is wrong to sell bulbs which do not give tulips, then what would you say about color-movie films which give hundreds of feet of realistic views of the inside of a coal mine at midnight in the dark of the moon when aimed at tropical scenes in Florida?

These films also cost money, but nobody ever expects them to produce color movies, except now and again a chance shot, just as the tulip sometimes, unexpectedly gives a tulip.

That is to say, of course, your tulip bulbs and your color films. Other people get blossoms and beautiful shots of the children at the World's Fair, but not you.

The Magyar Dilemma

By Dorothy Thompson

Facing A German Thrust

Budepest - Belgrade - Zagreb (Croatia), May 1.

IN HUNGARY, hope is not altogether abandoned either that the Germans will not move into southeastern Europe in the immediate future of that, if they do, they will avoid passing through Hungary. Responsible persons fear that neither of these hopes is well founded, but they advance some reasonable arguments in support of them, chiefly, of course, that for the time being Germany is getting the bulk of the exportable produce from southeastern Europe and that the military occupation of these countries might not assist her economically, except for a very short time.

Within the last fortnight, all sorts of measures have been taken by all the countries along the Danube to safeguard against adventures in these countries. Much more rigid control has been established over all foreigners entering them. In Rumania, foreign residents of visitors are required to have special police permits to be able to move from one town or another. This, I understand, was done because the secret police discovered that uniforms and arms were being smuggled into the country by persons posing as commercial agents. Foreigners are now compelled to turn over to the police all arms, war material, and even cameras which they possess, on pain of instant expulsion.

The decision of Hungary, Rumania, Bulgaria and Yugoslavia jointly to police the Danube was published a fortnight ago, immediately after the Thermonde incident. The Thermonde, a former Belgian ship sailing under the British flag, was caught at Giurgiu, the Rumanian Danube port directly opposite the Bulgarian port of Ruschuk. Since the incident is being kept very quiet by everybody, it is not clear why the Rumanian authorities became suspicious of this ship, whose papers were apparently in order. Some say it was because the personnel bore no resemblance to the usual Danubian bargees, and this is very likely because the crew of 52 men were commanded by a British major of artillery and a British army captain, the latter disguised as a cook. The ship carried explosives, pneumatic drills and an immense amount of canned food. Apparently the idea was either to blow up the banks and block the river at the Iron Gate—the narrows shortly above the point where the river ceases to be a Yugoslav boundary — and thus blockade an important German trade channel, or to establish a base on Ada-Kalad Island, which is inhabited exclusively by Turks, who have a cigarette monopoly there. Austrians and Turks moved there during the Napoleonic Wars. The proposed adventure may have been preventive, but the presence of such vast amounts of canned food seems to have indicated that the little company intended to occupy the island and prepare for action in case the Germans moved in the Balkans. The cargo had several field guns.

AT ANY RATE, the adventure came to an inglorious end, and immediately afterward the Danube police control was created which forbids any transit traffic of arms without permission of the government of the state through which such transit takes place and which provides for the control of the crews of all ships plying the Danube. This action was also an answer to Germany, which had threatened to police the Danube herself.

In Hungary they state that the Dardanelles question depends on the situation in the Mediterranean and that, pending any action of Italy, this question must still be left open.

It is known that German geological experts have visited Rumania and have reported that the production of oil is inefficient and could be vastly augmented by new methods.

BUT THERE are other aspects of the situation not included in this Hungarian summary.

German journalists, traveling in southeastern Europe, where they often encounter old friends and sometimes speak with apparent candor, have been amazingly outspoken within the last ten days concerning the situation in Germany itself. They say that Germany cannot survive another winter of war and that the war must be won this summer. They say that the German strategy was to take Norway without the resistance of the Norwegians themselves, whom they expected to capitulate immediately, and from Norwegian airdromes to launche a tremendous aerial attack upon British ports, in the hope of effecting such disorganization of British shipping as would amount to a blockade. In the panic that they expected or still expect would follow, even if it lasted only for there weeks, they would offer a separate peace to France and a new deal in southeastern Europe in which they would be backed up by Italy. I pass this on for what it is worth.

German dispatches published in Hungary have been emphasizing that "the Norwegian terrain will be merely a secondary battlefield in this war. The decision will unquestionably fall in another place."

This would seem to indicate that Germany may follow up successes in Norway with direct attempts by air against Britain.

IF, HOWEVER, the Nazis move eastward, which way will they go? The question concerns every country southeast of Germany. Each has been assured that Germany would respect its neutrality. Not one of them believes it.

But not one pretends to know what the German, Italian or Russian plans are or whether any triple action or dual action might take place.

Hungary counts on the good will of Italy, with whom her relations are intimate, and wishful thinkers speculate that rather than march across Hungary against Rumania, the Germans may move through Yugoslavia, across the narrow strip between Italy and Hungary and north of the Sava River. This seems to military experts a very roundabout way to get to Rumania. There are irrepressible reports, however, of the passage of German troops through the Yugoslav countryside. It is interesting that these reports were denied to me by officials in Belgrade, whereas responsible persons in Budapest verified them.

MILITARY experts think that if Germany invades Rumania she will do so through Hungary and through northeastern Yugoslavia. The best line of march for the Germans would be through central Hungary and the wide valley east of the Tisa River in Yugoslavia. This was the line of march of Attila the Hun, and he is actually buried at Senta, which is now part of Yugoslavia. Through this valley also runs the only stretch of road in Yugoslavia. It would be very difficult for the Germans to march into Rumania directly from Hungary because of the mountain ranges.

Nor would the Germans, in all probability, encounter the Yugoslav Army in this quarter, for it would be an impossible terrain to defend for more than a few hours. Military experts think that the Yugoslav army would retreat and make a stand on the Sava River at the outlets of the Bosna, Drav and Drina Rivers, using the natural river defenses which are at the same time the defenses of old Serbia.

This, of course, would lay the Yugoslav provinces of Coratia and Slovenia open to the kind of revolutionary occupation of which the Nazis are past masters. And the Croatians, it must be remembered, have had frequent conflicts with the Serbians inside the Yugoslav state. The process of conciliation began only last August, when Prince Paul, with real statesmanship, agreed to wide autonomy for the enlarged Croat province.

However, Frankist activities in Croatia have never ceased. The Frankist movement — which was responsible for the murder of King Alexander in 1934—has become the Ustacha organization. Ustacha has for his leader Ante Paveelich, who the Nazis expect, in case of an invasion, might conceivably play a Quisling role or the role that Henlein and Hacha must have played in the break-up of Czecno-Slovakia. The Ustacha is for complete independence for Croatia. The group has a negligible influence at present, but no one can tell how much it might gain in an occupation.

IN CASE OF a German attack on Rumania that would involve Yugoslavia, Italy would certainly play an active role, if for no other reason than to prevent the Germans themselves from coming into some occupation of Yugoslavia. During the last 14 months Italy has hastily fortified the whole sector around Tarvisio. It has cost millions, and the parole went out that it had to be finished by the first of May. These fortifications can hardly be considered a bulwark against Yugoslavia, which certainly has no mind to invade Italy. They are on the German-Italian-Yugoslav frontier.

Should Yugoslavia become an arena of the war, Italy would of course take the Dalmatian coast and might work inward across southern Yugoslavia to Bulgaria. Under such circumstances it is certain that Russia would occupy Bessarabia, and Rumania would be closed in upon from all directions. Incidentally, Bulgaria, with a German, an Italian and a Russo-phile population, is the single friendly meeting point of Rome-Berlin-Moscow.

On the assumption that Germany is going to try to force a decision in the east along with the west, something of this kind may be expected.

THE OUTLOOK for Germany in southeastern Europe is unquestionably more favorable than it was before the retreat of the British in Norway. The ground has already been thoroughly prepared by methods that I will outline in my next column.

None of these countries is prepared to assist any other and the likelihood of their defending themselves depends to an immeasurable extent upon the degree of their confidence that the Allies will eventually win the war. Until a fortnight ago that confidence was strong in all southeastern governments, including Hungary, despite the overwhelming nature of the German influence and the great immediate fear of Germany.

But if Germany has a free hand in Scandinavia, the defeatism will grow overnight.

Books And Things

Florida Crackers

IT'S A CURIOUS fact: the people in Marjorie Kinnan Rawlings' stories, "When the Whippoorwill—" (Scribner's, $2.50), might be cousins of the folk who live along Erskine Caldwell's tobacco roads. They are as ragged and as hungry and as shiftless; they talk the same language; they have something of the same bawdy humor. But you like them better. The material is the same; the authors are different.

It's a different landscape, too. The piney woods and "palmeeter" swamps of central Florida are a lovelier land to look on than the hard clay soil of north Georgia. But life isn't easier for Mrs. Rawlings' than for Mr. Caldwell's poor white trash. They are the same folk, whether you call them Crackers in Florida, Rednecks on the Gulf Coast, Woolhats and Po' Buckra in South Carolina, Tackies, Sandhillers, Peckerwoods and Hillbillies farther inland, or Conchs and Tar Heels in North Carolina; and the best Southern literature of today is written about them, in singularly various moods.

Shields McIlwaine, a professor at Memphis and "the Ford-driving son of a Presbyterian minister in North Carolina," made that clear in an interesting study called "The Southern Poor-White, From Lubberland to Tobacco Road" (University of Oklahoma Press, $3). "Historically considered," he said, "the loudly condemned American sadism of Faulkner and Caldwells, as it applies to poor whites, is merely a revival of the emphasis upon degradation employed by Longstreet and a few others for history, by the Abolitionists for propaganda. Now it is used by these Southerners for fictional effects, both humorous and tragic." Indeed, Mr. McIlwaine traced it back to the accounts of the frontier "lubbers," written more than two centuries ago by that great gentleman and cruel snob, William Byrd, of Westover.

But the older writers looked at the poor whites entirely from the outside; they seldom paused to sympathize with them. And, despite the ribald enthusiasm of Broadway crowds for the play made from Mr. Caldwell's novel "Tobacco Road," that book has always seemed to me a tragic rather than a comic masterpiece. Mr. Caldwell's laughter is an emotional release from the shock of horror. Indeed his later work is occasionally hampered by a too obvious reformer's zeal. Mrs. Rawlings is no reformer, but that she loves her Crackers is as obvious in "When the Whippoorwill—" as it was in "The Yearling."

One of the stories in this book "Gal Young Un," on the O. Henry Memorial Short Story Prize in 1933.. Another "Jabob's Ladder" well remembered ever since its first appearance in Scribner's Magazine nine years ago is 30,000 words long; shorter stories have been printed separately as novelettes. Three of the best together as long as "Jacob's Ladder," are told by Quincey Dover, a 200-pound lady who is worth a whole book in herself.

Awaiting Italy's Decision

IN THE DECISION which Mussolini is now called upon to make regarding Italy's future role in the war one question is likely to prove of transcendent importance.

If the Duce is convinced that, as Field Marshal Goering boasts, sea power is now wholly at the mercy of air power, there is a real possibility that he will cast the die for war.

If, on the other hand, Mussolini entertains any grave doubts on that score there is an equally strong possibility that he will order the continuation of Italy's nonbelligerency for at least a while longer.

TODAY, as in the past, Italy is extremely vulnerable to uncontested sea power. Italy has a fleet of her own, an excellent fleet according to all expert reports, but one which is no more a match for the combined naval forces of Great Britain and France than Germany's fleet has proved to be.

To be sure, Italy has a large number of submarines. They might do a great deal of damage to the British and French fleets. That they alone could destroy Allied sea power in the Mediterranean is, however, most unlikely. In the meantime the Allied blockade would be playing havoc with Italy's none too happy economy.

Italy was at war from 1935 to 1939. Neither the Ethiopian venture nor the Spanish conflict was on a scale comparable with the present European struggle. Nonetheless, these wars did involve a certain wastage of Italy's substance. And Italy has thus far been unable to capitalize either the Ethiopian or the Spanish victory.

It is doubtful if Italy, which is poor in raw material resources, has succeeded in piling up any large reserves of food or coal or oil or other essentials. She may have enough of supplies for a few months. It is hardly enough for a long war.

ON THE BASIS of realism, therefore, a decision by Mussolini to enter the war on Germany's side would necessarily have to rest on the belief that the addition of Italian military might, sea power and air power to those of the Third Reich would speedily bring the Allies to their knees. And this, in turn, would rest on a calculation that Allied sea power could be destroyed by German and Italian air power before the Allies could deal Italy a knockout blow.

IN SENDING a large additional fleet to the Mediterranean the Allies were playing their trump card. The move was precautionary. It was obviously designed to intimidate Italy into inaction. It also placed the Allies in a position to act in the event that Mussolini was not intimidated, but proceeded to carry out the threats of belligerency which the Fascist press and Fascist spokesmen have been making for some weeks.

On the other hand, Germany has also been playing a trump card. The fighting in Norway provided a further illustration, following the German blitzkrieg in Poland, of the enormous importance of the airplane in modern war. Had 1914 conditions prevailed, the Germans would never have been able to make the headway they did in Norway nor score the very speedy success they have achieved. But while the German victory has proved that air can limit the effectiveness of sea power it did not prove that air power can completely overcome sea power.

IT IS IN THIS latter connection that the claims emanating from Berlin that Nazi bombers succeeded in sinking a British battleship of the Queen Elizabeth class and a British cruiser of the York class have great importance.

These claims may be 100 per cent true; they may be exaggerated; they may even, as a third possibility, be figments of Dr. Goebbel's imagination. There is no way of telling what actually happened although British silence on the subject suggests that real damage may have been done the British squadron off Namsos by the German air force.

It is of the utmost significance, however, that the Nazi leaders are giving these claims the fullest possible play and drawing from them all manner of enthusiastic conclusions. Thus "official German quarters" are hailing the exploits of the German air force as "conclusive proof of the supremacy of air power over naval power and decisive for the future course and outcome of the war." And Goering is cited as saying that the feat "once and for all destroyed the myth of British mastery of the seas."

This may be true and it may be merely wishful thinking. In either case the intent is probably to cheer the German people and, at the same time, to assure Mussolini that Italy need no longer worry about the British fleet since it would meet its match in the Italian air force.

Actually, of course, even if the German reports are true, the conclusion which Goering draws from them may have only a limited and temporary validity. Germany may not enjoy mastery of the air forever or even for long and the sinking of one battleship off the Norwegian coast need not necessarily mean that all battleships everywhere can be sunk by bombers. But for Germany's purposes it would be sufficient if Mussolini were impressed.

Germany, too, is gambling everything it has on a short war without which the Norwegian triumph and all the other territorial triumphs of the past few years could become so many Pyrrhic victories. So the military struggle in Norway has been followed by an equally intense but so far bloodless struggle over Italy. The decision rests with Mussolini.

The Gentler Sex

—By Malvina Lindsay

Safety First

"Hello . . . This is Mrs. Blink . . . Who? . . . No. I don't . . . Well, your voice sounds familiar, but—Who? . . . Nettie? . . . What? . . . Oh, Nettie Trayle! . . . Well, what are you doing here? . . . Oh, you have! New York! . . . How nice! . . . Well are—are you . . . er—alone? . . . Oh he is . . . Oh, Junior, too! . . . Yes he must be a great big boy.

"Well when did you get in? . . . Just yesterday? . . . Oh! Yes there is a lot to see here, but of course sightseeing's awfully tiresome . . . Me? . . . Oh no, I don't do any of it . . . No, I don't have the time . . . No I'm simply rushed to death.

"Well how are you all? . . . That's good . . . Oh, we're alright—no, that is,—well I haven't been so well lately . . . Oh nothing except that I've just had so much to do . . . Well I had a lot of company for one thing—and I'm expecting some more right away.

"Well how—how long are you going to be here? . . . Not this afternoon! . . . What time does the train leave? . . . In an hour! Well now WHY didn't you call me sooner, Nettie? I'd simply LOVE to see you! And George and Junior, too! . . . Yes, I'd rush right down to the train this minute if I wasn't tied up with a million things.

"You know Nettie, Jim and I were talking just the other night about you and the good times we all used to have at your house. I know Jim'll be simply brokenhearted at missing you. We'd both so love to have a good visit with you.

"Oh, yes, of course I know you are in a hurry to get back home. Especially after you've been living in a suitcase so long . . . And of course traveling with a child is so hard. What train are you taking? . . . Oh, that's a wonderful train! It's really the best one out of here.

"Well, it's certainly too bad you have to rush off this way. Now if only you'd called sooner . . . Oh, but it wouldn't have been any bother . . . No I'd love to have shown you around some. Well maybe some other time—that is—if we're still here . . . Oh no, but you never can tell what'll happen.

"Oh, you must? Well of course you don't want to miss your train. No, I always believe in getting to the station plenty early . . . Yes it saves nerve strain. Well, give my love to George and Junior . . . It's certainly been nice to hear your voice, and I'm so glad you called up . . . Oh yes, of course we will, if we ever get out that way, and maybe some day you can come—well anyway I'm glad to have talked to you . . . Oh just tell everybody hello for me . . . Alright I will . . . And take care of yourself and come—well really I mustn't hold you up about your train . . . All right . . . Goodby darling."

New Trends Seen In Decorations

New York (AP).—New trends in home decoration may indicate Americans are searching for security in a chaotic world.

Roy Belmont, chairman of the board of the American Institute of Decorators, thinks they do. Answers of other decorators to an institute questionnaire pointed to the same conclusion.

"People want things in their home that are good for tired nerves," says Belmont. "No bizarre extremes. People are choosing less costly materials; rooms get individuality from color and texture."

Reading and Spelling Difficulties of Children May Tie Up With Lefthandedness, Says Expert

Underwood & Underwood

Miss Ellen K. Donohue, an expert in training children who are backward or retarded, says it is the duty of the parent and teacher to look for hidden causes if normal children are not able to learn to read without difficulty. Poor sight, bad hearing and immaturity are some of the reasons for reading difficulty according to this teacher

Ellen K. Donohue Warns of Forcing Use of Right Hand

By Martha Ellyn,

IT WAS ONCE thought that if a child insisted on shaking hands or writing with his left hand, he was out of step with society. But today psychologists do not consider such children as "misfits"; rather they say they differ in neurological pattern.

Martha Ellyn

How to deal with the children who are "southpaws," who have reading difficulties and other psychological problems, was discussed recently by Miss Ellen K. Donohue, an expert in the field of remedial work or retraining if children. Miss Donohue, who has been visiting in Washington, is the director of Speech Education, Ethical Culture School, New York City, to which children are sent from all parts of the United States. This summer she will be on the staff of Stanford University, in the Educational Guidance Center. Miss Donohue has studied at Indiana University and the University of London. She is the co-author of a book with Margaret A. Stanger, "Prediction and Prevention of Reading Difficulties," which presents a series of simple tests to determine the need for special training of children.

In discussing the problem of the left-handed child Miss Donohue took up the differences in class room behavior citing the case of a small boy enrolled in kindergarten. The child's mother in recommending him, said that his only social defect was his insistence upon shaking hands with his left hand. His work in school proved his preference for his left hand in all things. When he was given picture books he usually began at the back of the book turning the pages with the left hand. He also looked at the comic strips at home backwards.

However nobody took these things seriously. He was promoted to the first grade and wanted to learn to read. Reading was introduced. He did not like it. He was taught to write with his right hand. His writing as would be expected, was not good. He was asked to practice writing. His parents urged him to excel. He grew less happy and less amiable. His mother reported that school had not been a good influence. He began to stutter. Ascending the stirway on the left side he collided with a big boy who was hurrying down. He resented being told by the big boy on the right side to "watch where he was going." It was a rebuke he did not seem to deserve.

Other children in his group, of equal or lower intelligence than he, began to read easy material smoothly and rapidly. He announced that he "did not want to read anyway." The teacher had recognized that he was lagging behind the others. The home situation resulting from the parents' ill-concealed disappointment at their bright child's failure can easily be imagined. He was known to be of superior intelligence. The symptoms persisted; and the teacher, finally convinced that evidence indicated something more fixed than the usual problem of beginning reading, asked for tests to determine the difficulty and for help in devising teaching procedures for this child. After a discouraging loss of time his reading needs were recognized and met successfully.

Reading Difficulties

Miss Donohue enumerated some of the most common causes of the failure of normal children to learn to read without difficulty. Among her points are:

Physical disability. Poor sight. Bad hearing.

Immaturity. The child must be ready to read.

The failure of teachers diagnosing the individual child.

Teaching methods which are not suited to the individual.

On the positive side, intelligence is the most significant factor.

The child who needs speech connection should have his speech cleared before it becomes an added cause of failure in reading and spelling.

Miss Donohue is writing a series or six books (written phonetically). "Atlantic Clipper," the first, will be released soon by the Oxford Press. The books are written primarily for children who are being taught to read phonetically. This series about young Americans attempts to present stories about several types of American children. The children are as different as their backgrounds, their surroundings and their economic status. Their experiences differ accordingly. Bill, the boy who flies to France in the Atlantic Clipper, is a boy whose way of life is superimposed by his environment.

Physical Handicaps Often Are Back Of Speech Problems

A Woman's New York

—By Alice Hughes

ELEANOR LeMAIRE, interior architect who has just returned from a business trip to Canada, tells us that although the country is at war, the city of Toronto is gay and festive-looking. Uniformed soldiers appear on the streets and add dash to the social events.

ALICE HUGHES

Women dress gaily for the men on leave, and the rise in marriages held before the boys march off for war has stimulated stores' business.

Odd, that a manifestation of woe should look so jolly on the surface. Here, too, the outer aspects of fighting "Over There" are parties, gayer and better attended than ever. Most of them have a motive, however. They're part of the relief drive, and there's one going on all the time. Most ambitious was Mrs. Harrison Williams' benefit party exhibit of 117 dresses actually worn by, and taken from the wardrobe of the most famous beauties of Paris and New York. It will last a month, and proceeds will buy comfort kits for soldiers.

Tomorrow night there's a French relief auction and fashion fete; the night after that, the Allied Ball. Every afternoon, there are teas and bridges where women knit and play cards, and cook up plans for more parties. We're all for gaiety, but this is gaiety with a difference.

Professional and society women who do not wish to keep secretaries make a practise of dropping in at a centralized office to recite their letters into a mouthpiece. Next day they receive their words all neatly typed, addressed and even stamped. Edith Maiser, actress and playwright, whose "Strangler Fig" is having out-of-town tryouts, tells me she dictated most of her play into one of these impersonal secretaries, and that the dialogue is far better for being spoken instead of written.

Your Figure, Madame!

—By Ida Jean Kain

Exercise Needed by Office Workers In Order to Cope With Daily Duties

IT'S THE most marvelous thing in the world to get up in the morning feeling so well rested that you are ready to cope with whatever comes your way. But in this age of high pressure, rush and nervous tension, it's almost customary to dread the day's work ahead.

This is especially true of office workers. Work that makes little use of the muscles, makes physical training seem unimportant. It's only natural for the office worker to dismiss exercise as one of life's nonessentials.

Feeling of Well Being

I am not attempting to sell you on the idea that exercise will do everything for you. It will not. There is not the slightest evidence that it increases resistance to disease or that it provides immunity to colds. But the afterglow of exercise does carry with it a feeling of well being, of sheer, exuberant health, which can make the difference between a good day and a bad one.

It is only incidental that exercise gives you a good figure. If the figure is streamlined, it is because the muscles are strong, and they are strong because they are kept in tone. The last is what matters most. When the muscles are in tone, pressure exerted on the nerve endings sends sensations along to the central nerves, which tell the brain that you are feeling fine. But unless you are in the pink of condition, those messages are not sent.

For office workers, the best exercises are those which use the large muscles. These are the most neglected in sedentary work. When exercised, their effect on the respiration and circulation is most beneficial. Whereas constant use of the small muscles only produces nervous tension, the use of the large muscles results in healthy physical fatigue and subsequently good sound sleep.

Need Not Be Strenuous

This type of exercise need not be strenuous. In fact, regularity and moderation are much more important for the sedentary worker who is not in good physical condition. It is worthwhile to remember that any exercise which involves physical extension of the body also gives a psychological lift. The Swedish "cross to fly" exercise is a good example of this type:

POSITION: Stand erect with arms crossed at wrists in front of body at waistline.

MOVEMENT: Rise on toes, at same time flinging arms up and out at sides. Return to beginning position and repeat. Swing with an easy, rhythmical movement, stretching up.

POSITION: Stand at ease with arms down at sides.

MOVEMENT: Hop up on the ball of one foot, stretching the arm on the same side high in air—exactly as if you were reaching for an apple on a tree just overhead. Hop on one foot first and then the other until you've picked a peck.

Plucking imaginary apples is grand exercise

Marriage Superstition

Are there any biological reasons for believing that it is unwise for a man to marry his deceased brother's wife?

This is an old belief, known in biology as "telegony." It probably originated from the opinion, commonly held by animal breeders, that the father leaves such an indelible impression on the mother that later offspring by a different father will bear the characteristics of the former sire. Thus, dog breeders pretty generally are convinced that a high-bred female who has borne pups to an underbred dog is ruined for breeding purposes, since she is liable at any time to bear ill-bred pups.

Many naturalists, such as Darwin, Agassiz and Romanes, subscribed to this idea, but Weissmann, the great research worker on heredity, said that "only the confirmation of the tradition by methodical investigation . . . could raise telegony to the rank of a fact," and this declaration started experimental investigation, which proved the falsity of the doctrine.

A famous case was that reported at the Royal Society by Lord Morton. A chestnut mare, after having hybrid offspring by a quagga (a striped horse-like animal of South America), produced, by a full black Arabian horse, three colts which showed a number of stripes. This case was carefully studied, however, and it was pointed out that stripes are not infrequently seen in high-grade Arabian horses without admixture of other strains.

Experiments by Ewart and other biologists have shown in the case of many birds and mammals that no offspring inherit any of the characters from previous mates of the mother.

There is, therefore, no biologic reason why a woman should not marry her deceased husband's brother.

New Ensemble Combines Light And Dark Tones

Newest in ensemble ideas is the combination of a light frock with very dark accents. Irene Dunne, movie actress, chose a white shirtwaist frock of cotton interwoven with a cellophane thread. She wears it with a broad-brimmed hat of black straw, fastened with a gnood of the dress material. To complete the ensemble, she chose long black gloves, white bag and shoes.

Also smart this season is the head to heels ensemble, all in one color, dress and accessories matched exactly. This type ensemble was designed for Gail Patrick. Shirtwaist frock (both bodice and skirt are gathered to a wide waistband in front) is dark carnation red crepe. Turban is also red crepe, the accessories red alligator. Only contrast is the pair of glass hairpins trimming the hat, the diamond bowknot clipped to one pocket.

Taxpayers Urge $1.75 Realty Limit

Letter From Lusk Says Rate Increase Would Be Calamity

The Senate Subcommittee on District Appropriations was urged to stipulate a $1.75 real estate tax in the 1941 appropriations bill and hold expenditures within the limit of anticipated revenue in a letter sent yesterday by the Washington Taxpayers Association.

Rufus Lusk, president of the association, wrote Senator Overton (Democrat), of Louisiana, chairman of the subcommittee, that "it would be little short of a calamity to have the tax rate rise in the District."

Because real estate taxes are not as high here as in some municipalities the city has not been obliged "to take over property in wholesale chunks as has been the case in many another city," he said. "Let's avoid that condition where real property taxes become confiscatory."

The association suggested that the subcommittee consider the possibility of operating one-man police patrol cars. Lusk requested inclusion in the record of the subcommittee hearings of an article by O. W. Wilson, professor of police administration at the University of California, asserted that one-man cars are safer and more efficient than two-man cars.

Before considering requests for more patrolmen, the subcommittee should investigate the possibility of freeing 150 men from patrol car duty and placing them on additional beats, Lusk said.

Chritianity's Gains in China Told by Doctor

Increased need and admiration for Christianity in China was pictured here yesterday by Dr. Ernest H. Clay, now on furlough from his duties as superintendent of the Martyr's Memorial Hospital in Changli.

The fact that the church has given a demonstration of applied Christianity through assistance in wars, floods and famines has aroused China to the real significance of the Christian philosophy, Dr. Clay said from the pulpit of Union Methodist Church.

Dr. John R. Edwards, host pastor, and a former mission board official, presented Dr. Clay, who also spoke last night at First Congregational Church. He will address an interdenominational ministers' meeting today at 11:30 a. m. at New York Avenue Presbyterian Church, and a luncheon meeting of the Washington Church Committee on China Relief at 1 p. m. at the Y. W. C. A., Seventeenth and K streets northwest.

The Martyr's Hospital memorializes the Chinese, European and American Christians who lost their lives in the Boxer Rebellion in 1900.

Irish Minister Says His Nation Will Stay Neutral

The government and the people of Eire are determined to avoid involvement in the European war, Robert Brennan, the Irish Minister, declared last night at a dinner of the Rhode Island State Society at the Shoreham Hotel.

"The government has decided to keep out of this war and on this question all parties are in absolute agreement" the diplomat told more than 200 members of the society.

Reviewing progress of the Irish Free State in its two decades of autonomy, Brennan pointed to the fact that Eire has the lowest national debt of any European state—"not more than 3,000,000 pounds—

Roosevelt Greets African Methodist Church Conference

President Roosevelt by letter yesterday told an international conference of the African Methodist Episcopal Zion Church here that the well-being of all sections of the population is necessary for the well-being of a democracy.

The letter, addressed to Bishop William J. Walls, of Chicago, was read at the morning session of the thirty-first quadrennial conference of the church in the John Wesley Church, Fourteenth and Corcoran streets northwest. The Rev. Mr. Walls conferred with the President Friday.

The President's letter greeted the conference, and added:

"May I reiterate what I have previously stated, that in establishing the rights of a minority in a democracy we must always bear in mind that the political, social and economic well-being of the whole people depends upon the achievement of that well-being for all sections of the population regardless of color, creed or geography."

Dirksen to Ask Tighter D. C. Income Tax

Will Push Fight In Committee Hearing Tomorrow

Representative Dirksen (Republican), of Illinois, said last night he will renew efforts to tighten the District income tax law at tomorrow's meeting of the House District Committee.

A bill introduced by Dirksen Tuesday would amend the present income tax act so as to apply the levy to all persons whose "place of abode" is here—whether or not they claim legal residence elsewhere—and to residents of Maryland, Virginia and other States who draw income in the District. Taxes paid here by nonresidents would be applied as credit against State income taxes.

Dirksen said he will attempt to have the tax bill referred from the full committee to the subcommittee on District fiscal affairs, although the controversial amendments to the District Unemployment Compensation Act are expected to occupy most of the committee's time tomorrow.

Sparks for a time threatened other buildings in the industrial area, and flames burned poles supporting high tension wires along the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad's main Baltimore-Washington track.

Perry Boswell, of Mount Rainier, Helen Frigo, of Washington, Take Second and Third in Light Plane Class

Bob Sanders, of Washington, and George Arants, of Armont, N. Y., carried off top honors in the competitive events of the eighth annual Langley Day air meet, at Alexandria Airport, 5 miles below Alexandria, Va., yesterday. Arants piloted an open-place Beechcraft to victory in the race for heavy planes of 100 horsepower or more. Speed was not clocked.

Second place in the race for light planes went to Perry Boswell, of Mount Rainier, Md., who flew a Luscombe cabin monoplane, while third place was taken by Helen Frigo, of Washington, the only woman to finish in the money in either race. She piloted a Piper Cub.

In the race for heavy planes, second place was taken by G. W. Cully, of Farrel, Pa., who flew a Monocoupe. No third place prize was awarded.

Utility Plant Work Begins This Week

Building to Start On $2,000,000 Generating Unit In Alexandria

Actual work on a concrete, brick and steel building to house the new $2,000,000 steam generating plant of the Virginia Public Service Co. in Alexandria, will get under way this week, according to F. B. Ostermuller, public relations director for the company. Work will be done by the firm of Doyle & Russell, of Richmond.

A permit for the building was issued last week by Building Inspector A. R. Lash and resulted in an all-time record for Alexandria building projects authorized within a week. Cost of the generating plant was set at $1,472,625, which, with other construction permits issued, sent the week's total to $1,508,283.

Other building activities in the city included construction of five homes, costing $21,740, and authorization of 17 alteration and repair projects at a cost of $3,963.

While awaiting a permit for construction of the generating plant, which will be built adjacent to the company's present power plant on Union street, Virginia Public Service officials have completed preliminary work on schedule, Ostermueller said. Work on the building itself will start immediately, while installation of boilers, condensers and other generating equipment is scheduled for June 1. Because of the size of some of the machinery, it must be installed before the building is completed, Ostermueller said.

Tests of the finished plant are scheduled for next fall, and officials of the company have expressed the belief that the 15,000-kilowatt station will be in operation before 1941.

Street Bids to Be Asked

The city of Alexandria will advertise for bids this week for surfacing 8 to 10 miles of streets under the spring construction program. Specifications have been prepared by H. G. McCartney, city engineer, and will be available to contractors submitting bids, City Manager Carl Budwesky said.

Budwesky said additional bids would be asked for surfacing approximately 6 miles of streets later in the summer.

Lisa Lindsey Honored

Miss Lisa Lindsey, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Wallace Lindsey, of Alexandria, has been elected president of the dramatic board of Hollins College, Hollins, Va., for next year. She is a third-year student.

Miss Lindsey has been active in several dramatic productions this year, and is associate editor of the campus newspaper as well as a member of the joint legislative committee of the Student Government Association.

Alexandria Post 24, American Legion, has asked local residents to cooperate in securing the names of Alexandria men who were killed in action during the World War, for the purpose of placing a memorial tablet in honor of the city's World War dead in its headquarters at Gadsby's Tavern. All persons knowing of Alexandrians slain in action have been asked to submit lists to F. Clinton Knight, chairman for the memorial.

Mount Vernon Ladies to Meet On Thursday

The seventy-fourth annual convention of the Mount Vernon Ladies Association will be held at the historic estate Thursday at 10 a. m. with Mrs. Horace Mann Towner, regent, presiding.

Supt. C. C. Wall, of Mount Vernon and Mrs. Towner will submit their annual reports on the opening day. A number of relics presented during the past year by various individuals to Mount Vernon will be officially accepted.

The association will attend services at Pohick Church, Washington's home church, May 12, when Regent's Sunday will be observed. The members will occupy the Washington Family pews. The Rev. John C. Runkle, rector, will conduct the services.

Field Day Program Is Being Completed

Final arrangements for the field events, to be sponsored by the Community Center of Silver Spring next Saturday in the rear of the armory on Montgomery avenue, will be made tomorrow at the quarterly meeting of the organization in the old county building at 7:30 p. m.

William F. Carlin, who will preside, announced that the program, under the direction of Joseph Sivigny, will include softball, volley ball and baseball.

Fifth Column Attacks Humans, Rev. Isaac Steenson Warns

Disloyalty, Indifference, Defeatism And Compromise Sabotage Effectiveness In Life, Clarendon Pastor Observes

ARLINGTON COUNTY BUREAU OF THE POST
Clarendon, Va., Tel. OXford 0509

The elements of "blindness, weakness and treachery," denoted as the "Fifth Column" within a nation, operate in the same destructive manner within the individual, the Rev. Isaac Stevenson, pastor of the Clarendon Presbyterian Church, said yesterday.

Speaking at the morning services, Mr. Steenson asked:

"Why do people go to pieces? Why do people lose hold? Why do they go to pieces emotionally so that they become nervous wrecks? It is the business of religion to deal with these things.

"There are two requirements for power and effectiveness in life—the will to pray and the will to deny yourself."

Mr Steenson added that when these two requirements are absent, the "Fifth Column" moves in to the individual.

"That Fifth Column," he said, "is made up of disloyalty, indifference, compromise and defeatism. Before we know it we have sold our birthright for a mess of pottage."

More Nazi Havoc Shown In Norwegian News Shots

Uncensored Films Show Wanton Destruction; Producer-Director Capital Visitor Today; This, That and the Other About the Theater

ALTHOUGH THE FIRST EXCLUSIVE, UNCENSORED Paramount News shots of the Nazi invasion of Norway now are on view at the Earle, Metropolitan and Trans-Lux theaters, they had not reached the screen in time for the Earle's first performance last Friday, when we covered "Dark Command." They were, however, on the screen at the Metropolitan Saturday night—when we made a vagrant attempt to catch up on our home work by viewing "Too Many Husbands"—and are as appalling as you you might expect.

BELL

These newsreel clips are not censored releases filtering through any European bureau of propaganda, but were taken more or less on the sly by Arthur Menken, American newsreel photographer, and were slipped out of Scandinavia in unaltered form through Sweden for American release.

They show with chilling detail the bombing of open and defenseless Norwegian towns and their utter destruction by low-flying German planes dropping explosive and incendiary bombs upon a bewildered population that had not the faintest idea what it was all about or why. Mr. Menken provides his own commentary and makes it terrifyingly clear that the Nazis paid no more heed to the rules of civilized warfare in Norway than they did in their 18-day blitzkrieg in Poland.

We dealt at some length with the thoroughness and the ruthlessless of the Hitler war machine at the time of the release of the first Polish pictures. What you will see now is only another chapter in that barbaric and hideous story of the slaughter of the innocents. It is neither pleasant nor reassuring to contemplate and will inspire the hope that some will win that $1,000,000 reward for bringing Ded Fuehrer in to the League of Nations and delivering him, preferably alive.

If you have been worrying about where to buy your tickets for the Ringling Brothers-Barnum & Bailey Circus—due in town for a three-day stand, May 16, 17 and 18—pasteboards will go on sale at both the AAA and the ticket bureau in the Willard Hotel on May 13, which is by way of being a week from today.

It must run in the family. I mean to say that Manager Hardie Meakin, of KO-Keith's, for several seasons was a "kid" actor in the late Denman Thompson's production of "The Old Homestead" and came to Washington along about 1911 as a member of Poli's Stock Company. His eldest son, Leonard, now is following in the old man's footsteps by having written and directed "Include Me Out," the annual varsity show of the University of Maryland, to be staged in the "Ag" Auditorium at the college on May 8, 9 and 10. Leonard, a senior, and his fellow collegians have been working on the piece for the past three or four months. It is a story of college "politics" and has been described as sure-fire by those in the know.

Twentieth Century-Fox is engineering another composite junket to Pittsburgh for the premiere of "Lillian Russell" on May 15—just as they did to Springfield, Ill., for "Young Mr. Lincoln" some months back. Among the stars who will be present will be Alice Faye, who plays the title role, and Edward Arnold, who once again assumes the character of "Diamond Jim" Brady. It is the plan to have Twentieth Century's Eastern guests arrive in Pittsburgh on Tuesday, May 14, spend the night there, and return to their respective jobs late Wednesday night, following the premiere. Lillian Russell was a resident of Pittsburgh for several years after having married Alexander Moore, newspaper publisher in that city.

Mark Sandrich, who ranks high on Hollywood's slender list of producer-directors, will be a Washington visitor today. Now articled to Paramount, Mr. Sandrich is considered an expert on musical pieces for the celluloids. It was he who made "Man About Town," one of Jack Benny's most profitable box-office successes. He also is responsible for "Buck Benny Rides Again," soon to be seen at Loew's Palace Born and raised in New York City, Sandrich broke into pictures as far back as 1922, when he visited the old Century studios, while on a vacation from his studies at Columbia University. He has worked at "props," photography, cutting, writing gags and as assistant director. And now look where it has landed him!

"Katia," a love story of Alexander II of Russia, starring Danielle Darrieux, yesterday was added to the bill at the Belasco Theater as a companion feature to "Lights Out in Europe," Herbert Kline's illuminating "Documentary." With "Lights Out" running little more than an hour, this does away with the necessity of padding the program with a plethora of short subjects.

The New Yorker

By Leonard Lyons

WHEN THE RAINS of spring are through carousing with the earth of Manhattan, Park Commissioner Bob Moses will be confronted with a baffling mstery of nature and Broadway. The plot was hatched in Sardi's restaurant, where the proprietor has been relating to the theater folk who frequent the place all the pastorial delights which are his, as a result of the farming he practices in Long Island . . . Mr. Sardi has been rhapsodic in describing the fruit of his toil—the potatoes, onions, and the cabbages he grows. Whereupon Chester Erskine, who believes that a complete existence can be lived within the borders of Manhattan, purchased some seeds, planted them in the street-patch of earth at Park avenue and Fifty-fourth—and now is waiting for the radishes to bloom.

HANNAH WILLIAMS DEMPSEY will resume her theatrical career at the Ritz in Boston, and then, in June, she'll work at Ben Marden's Riviera . . . Harry Mendel and Herman Taylor, who now manage Tony Galento, will give a percentage of their share of the Baer fight to Connie Drake, fiancee of the late Joe Jacobs . . . The three major hook-ups, N. B. C., and Mutual, have been offered the rights to broadcast the Communist Convention—and don't know what to do about it. In making their proposals, the Reds offered, as an attraction, the fact that Earl Browder will speak . . . Ernest Hemingway will return to New York in two weeks, to see "The Fifth Column."

RENE BLUM sailed from New York without having negotiated a contract to present the Comedie Francaise in an American tour . . . Blum, who was one of the three passengers on the Ile de France, paid no fare. He was notified of the sailing one hour in advance, and was invited by the British Admiralty to become a passenger . . . Sam Goldwyn will arrive in New York next week, and will inspect Lillian Hellman's completed first draft of her adaptation of "The Little Foxes" . . . Brooks Atkinson, the drama critic, is writing a book about Emerson . . . Randolph Paul is slated to receive one of the new Federal judgeships in New York.

NOEL COWARD is leaving for Hollywood to Visit Alexander Woollcott . . . Coward went to the Stork Club, and was fascinated by the leader of the rumba band, who danced while balancing a glass of water atop his head. The dancer then stretched out on the floor, and arose—without having spilled a drope of that water . . . "How clever," said Coward, "and I'm glad I can't do that—because if I could, then I should have to do it . . . and that wouldn't be so clever."

CHARLES BOYER has brought his mother to America to keep her here for the duration of the war . . . Boyer is taking the "Colis de Trianon" to Hollywood for a benefit presentation at the Hollywood Bowl . . . Walter Hampden, who will portray the role of the Indian, "Big Chief," in Cecil de Mille's all-color "The Northwest Mounted," has discovered a way of making his blue eyes appear brown in the film. He's patenting his discovery . . . Fefe's Monte Carlo will be informal after May 7, when the Hartman's start working there . . . Charles Yale Harrison, who wrote "Generals Die in Bed," destroyed the first two drafts of his new novel and has started anew.

ROBERT E. SHERWOOD eliminated one line about foreign correspondents during the Providence performance of his new play, "There Shall Be No Night" . . . The line was spoken by Richard Whorf, portraying the role of a radio reporter who returns to Helsinki shortly before the Red aviators start dropping their bombs . . . "I covered Prague and Vienna and now Helsinki," was the line. "We're like rats in reverse—running to a ship that's sinking."

A NEW WRITER, who had brought a manuscript to Pearl Buck for criticism, confessed: "I got the most interesting rejection slip from a publisher. He wrote to me as if I already had had two of three books published" . . . For the first time since the Pickens Sisters disbanded, Jane Picken will make recordings alone this week . . . J. B. Mabon, jr., son of the Wall Street broker, was at a dinner party when he learned that Paul Bowles' yacht was reported missing. "Five of my best friends were on that yacht," he lamented "It's terrible to lose so many friends, all at once" . . . "Yes, isn't it?" agreed his neighbor—the Finnish consul.

Every State In Union Is A Film Story

Wesley Ruggles Finds Governors All Eager To Submit Ideas

HOLLY—WED Theaters bull . . .
By Frederick C. Othman
United Press Hollywood Correspondent

Hollywood, May 5.—Wesley Ruggles discovered today that the movie-making bug lurks in the hearts of some mighty prominent people. Such as the governors of nearly every State in the Union.

Ruggles now is making a picture entitled "Arizona." Another outfit is making "Maryland." A third is doing "Virginia." Texas has appeared so much in the movies that there's probably not a fan in the world who hasn't seen at least one film version of the battle of the Alamo.

Many another State, Ruggles decided, might make equally as exciting a movie. So he wrote all the governors, except those of Arizona, Maryland, Virginia and Texas, asking if they had any good ideas. Did they!

Gubernatorial Synopses

They sent enough to keep Hollywood busy for the next 20 years. Gov. Richard C. McMullen, of Delaware, even hinted that his legislature might consider helping foot the bill for a picture based on his State. Gov. Luren D. Dickinson, of Michigan, turned Ruggles' letter over to Dr. George N. Fuller, of the State Historical Society. He said okay, so long as the Michigan movie cost Michigan nothing. He said furthermore that Michigan's history should make a "magnificent screen drama."

Gov. Herbert H. Lehman wrote at length about New York and its historic figures and suggested 14 different stories, from the Indian wars to the building of the East River Tunnels. Gov. Nels H. Smith of Wyoming promised to take off his coat and roll up his sleeves in the filming of "Wyoming," while Gov. G. D. Aiken of Vermont said he'd already made a Vermont travelogue in color, which he'd be glad to lend. Gov. Prentice Cooper indicated he'd like to see the script before approving "Tennessee."

Back to Fourteenth Century

Minnesota's background reaches all the way to the Goths of the fourteenth century, Gov. Harold E. Stassen pointed out. Gov. A. Harry Moore wrote that the mere fact New Jersey is one of the 13 original colonies makes it a good movie subject.

Gov. Leverett Saltonstall said Massachusetts had so many dramatic opportunities afforded by the decide which to choose. Gov. George Wilson said he'd like to see "Iowa" on the screen.

"I honestly believe that here in Indiana we have the setting for a great motion picture, a motion picture dedicated to the greatness of America," wrote Gov. M. Clifford Townsend.

Gov. C. A. Bottolfsen said: "It is my firm conviction that the dramatic opportunities afforded the vigorous, glamorous history of the Idaho have been sadly neglected."

Nathan Hale for Hero

Gov. Raymond E. Baldwin outlined the history of Connecticut in three closely typed pages and said he believed Nathan Hale should make a great hero.

Gov. Harlan J. Bushfield said he'd just completed an article about South Dakota and that instead of submitting it to some magazine, he was forwarding it to Hollywood. Gov. John E. Miles said "New Mexico" ought to be at least as good as "Arizona;" maybe better. Gov. William H. Vanderbilt said he believed "Rhode Island" should make a fine movie.

The Governors of Illinois, Louisiana, Maine, Montana, Pennsylvania, Utah and Missouri, hadn't answered at this writing.

Trans-Lux

The Trans-Lux Theater scored another beat for its current show, with the first films of the Norway and Danish invasion to arrive in Washington. These films were rushed by Atlantic air clipper and are sensational. You will wince at seeing the Germans take possession of Oslo, and the Nazi bombers spreading destruction over helpless Elverum.

On this side of the Atlantic you will see the great French liner, Ile de France, putting out to sea from New York with two passengers and a million dollar cargo. Other news shots include U. S. Cavalry being put on wheels; Gen. Dawes demanding the balancing of the budget, as he speaks before the United States Chamber of Commerce; Wellesley's May Day; Maryland Hunt classic and Lew Lehr picking the perfect baby.

Among the short subjects are gorgeous pictures, in Syria, of the "Ruins of Palmyra and Baalbek;" an Our Gang comedy, with Alfalfa in the lead, and "Roughhouse Fiesta" having to do with the business of wrestling. "One Hundred Pygmies and Andy Panda" is the color cartoon.

Louella O. Parsons

Close-Ups and Long-Shots Of the Motion Picture Scene

Hollywood, May 5 (INS).—There's a story back of Joan Blondell's sudden decision to abandon the movies long enough to star locally and in San Francisco in Al Wood's show "Women of the Chorus." Long ago Al gave Joan her first break on Broadway and she hasn't forgotten, so when the showman wanted a "name" to launch his new play and to create interest for the West Coast debut, Joan stepped in to help out her old friend. However, she won't go East.

LOUELLA PARSONS

Joan and Dick Powell have just finished "I Want a Divorce," at Paramount, and evidentally they don't feel it is a jinx for married people to co-star on the screen for they're remaining on the lot as a team. While Joan is doing the Wood show, Dick is set for an original story by Preston Sturgis. Then the Powells will be reunited in "Transatlantic Clipper," a comedy which takes place 10,000 feet in the air. It probably wouldn't be the best idea for all movie marrieds to co-star on the screen, but Dick has never gone in for the great lover roles and he and Joan are amusing together.

John Charles Thomas, world famous baritone, breezed into town to record songs for "Kingdom Come," his first movie. Apparently Producers Corporation Associated plan to make more than this one movie with Thomas. They planked down $25,000 for the right to Phil Stong's new novel, "Ivanhoe Keeler," a swell part for Thomas in that the hero is an American entertainer who becomes a soldier of fortune when his best girl jilts him. There is a Damon and Pythias slant with Charles Bickford playing the other male role. Bickford is also in "Kingdom Come." David Boehm has been engaged to do the adaptation of both stories and Frances Farmer is being sought to play the girl of the Stong novel.

Snapshots of Hollywood Collected at Random: Sorry to hear Cliff Lewis, head of Paramount publicity, and his wife, the former Marge Decker, have decided to end their five years of married life. She was formerly head of the fan mail department; The Samuel Goldwyns are leaving for New York on a chartered plane with Merle Oberon, Alexandria Korda and the Bill Paleys; Clarke Gable returned to work last week-end, the first time since the extras forgot to be careful and he received a split lip.

Alice Faye, who has been spending more and more time at Victorville, returned last Friday; Anatole Litvak, who is now smiling on Barbara O'Neil, dining with her at Ciro's; Joe Penner hosted a party Saturday night; Mary Astor was permitted to return from the "Brigham Young" location, near Big Bear, to celebrate her birthday with her husband and children; because of the Kentucky Derby many of our Hollywood folk are in Louisville. Irene Dunne opened the ceremonies by singing "My Old Kentucky Home."

That's all for today. She you tomorrow!

Gayety

The "welcome home" sign is out at the Gayety this week for Rose LaRose and Bob Carney, two performers whose appearance here for the next seven days should prove a real treat for burlesque fans.

Miss LaRose is an artiste whose musical routines and dance specialties have made her a big favorite here. Wearing some unusually beautiful gowns she appears in several numbers, offered in her own inimitable manner.

Bob Carney is a rare entertainer. This smiling, genial Irishman, with his stories and ingratiating personality, lifts the production out of the ordinary and makes it one of the merriest revues of the current season. A grand trouper and master showman is Carney.

When Carney isn't around, with his rib-tickling jokes in dialect, or busy telling you how good the rest of his cowokers really are, Billy Wallace and Harry ("Hello Jake") Fields present several funny sketches. With the able assistance of Bob Taylor, a seasoned performer and unusually good straight man, the boys make the dull moments few and far between.

On the distaff portion of the bill are such charmers as Winnie Garrett, Sally O'Day and Roberta Carney. The Misses Garrett and O'Day entertain with some enchanting beauty parades, while Miss Carney not only presents some clever dance routines, but proves herself a better-than-average "talking woman."

Hollywood, May 4.

Dwight Talyor, Laurette's son, is the busiest writer in town. He's mixing oil and water in writing the comedy for Bing Crosby, Mary Martin, Basil Rathbone, and Oscar Levant, whom he's writing in as a fat Ned Sparks, He's just finished "F. O. B. Detroit," does "Skylark" for Claudette Colbert, and in spare moments (?) an original for Bob Hope—and is planning an apartment house, as he says, so his wife will be a rich widow. Sounds as though she'd be one soon.

Since Ken Murray is appearing in "A Night at Earl Carroll's" he's had a dozen applicants offering to be his stand-in for nothing. Ken says, "What?—with all these pretty girl running round in a whisper? This is one time I'll do my own standing—or running!"

Rin-TinTin's name will flash across the screen before long. This time it's the son of the famous movie dog, Rin-Tin-Tin, jr., who's going to start a series of thrillers. Poppa "Rin," you know, made his debut as a wolf years ago, with Wally Beery and Estelle Taylor. Rin-Tin-Tin, as a hungary wolf, chased Wally clear across the Russian Steppes. That's when he was really funny.

Once a champion always a champion. Fifty-two-year-old Jim Thorpe, America's greatest Indian all-around athlete—plays an assistant coach in "Knute Rockne." Just for laughs between takes, Jim kicked a 70-yard spiral—to show the boys he's still in shape.

When Tony Martin was playing golf the other day, an executive from an automobile company said, "Tony, I've got just the car for a successful young man like yourself." Tony took a look at the special job for a measly $7,500, and said, "Swell! Now, I'll show you mine." It was the coupe he bought when he was getting $350 a week at Twentieth-Century. Yes, he's still riding in it.

The Dick Powell-Joan Blondell picture, "I Want A Divorce almost had an extra racy scene in it. To save a set, the scene-builders masked out the executive offices and shot a scene in the open. BIMELECH BEATEN IN THE DERBY—A burnished bay colt named Gallahadion may never go down as one of the greats of the turf despite his stirring triumph over Bimelech in the Derby, but last Saturday he made a lasting contribution to racing. He briskly reminded race fans and self-appointed experts that super-horse honors are not to be distributed freely, at least not until after races are run.

POVICH

That's what Bimelech was supposed to be—a super-horse. The over-enthusiastic were already comparing him to Man o' War and snickering at the mention of Gallant Fox. Even Col. Bradley, who owned four Derby winners, proclaimed Bimelech as "the greatest horse I ever owned" despite the fact that Bimey had not yet won his Derby. That was to be a foregone conclusion.

But on Saturday, along came Gallahadion, the 35-to-1 shot who had been beaten 14 times at a 2-year-old in contrast to Bimelech's unbroken winning streak. In the run down the stretch it was the despised Gallahadion collaring the great Bimelech and running him into the ground. What happened to the super-horse?

And echo answers, "What super-horse?" It was a clear case of honors prematurely conferred. Folks who should have known better forgot, that 3-year-olds are never to be judged on their 2-year-old form. We were among the guilty ones. It was a stampede to Bimelech in the Derby. He didn't have much to beat—but when Gallahadion came pounding down the stretch what did Bimey do about it? Where was the super-horse in him? It was the end of the masquerade.

The track was cuppy, but super-horses are not supposed to mind that. Gallant Fox never did. Exterminator could win races on any kind of a track. Challedon loved the mud in May as he did the fast track in November. But it is now patently unfair to compare Bimelech and the super-horses. The dumb steed never made any such claims for himself. He was the victim of his friends, the folks who were swept away by the thrill of nine straight victories by a Bradley colt.

Gallahadion not only won the Derby and its $75,000 purse, but he gave turf folks cause to pause in the future when they are moved to acclaim some untested thoroughbred as a new wonder horse. Gallahadion proved once more that a race is never over until the horses run around the track. The only thing that was supposed to beat Bimelech on Saturday was poor racing luck, but the only poor luck he had was to encounter Gallahadion.

Ten years ago there was another such example of a startling upset of an odds-on favorite in an important stake race, but the passing of a decade dulls the memory and easily forgotten was the victory of Jim Dandy, the 100-to-1 shot, over Gallant Fox in the Travers Stakes of 1930. For a few years after that race, turf folks were painfully aware that it could happen, but Gallahadion on Saturday served up a fresh reminder.

Next year's Derby favorite will not be odds-on, even if he mops up the 2-year-old field even more impressively than Bimelech did. The memory of Gallahadion will still be too vivid to permit any such flocking to any favorite. "Remember Gallahadion!" is apt to be the deterring shout whenever the turf writers note a concerted swing to a so-called wonder horse. They weakened on the cry of "Remember Jim Dandy!" but the Bimelech defeat will bring them up sharply again. Future Derbys will be more interesting races because of Gallahadion.

The diehards will, of course, blame Jockey Freddie Smith for Bimelech's defeat, but advices from Louisville give the Cuban boy a clean bill. He is not rated among the more fashionable jockeys, but he got out of Bimelech everything that was in him, apparently, and that wasn't sufficient.

The only theory that might hold water is that Don Meade, Bradley's No. 1 contract rider, might have won with Bimelech. But it would have been a vicious sort of ride. Meade, possibly, would never have permitted Bierman on Gallahadion to slip through on the rail as he did on Saturday. Fisher tried that on Head Play in 1936 when Meade was astride Bold Venture and found Meade swinging punches at him, secure in the knowledge that the stewards would hesitate to disqualify a Derby winner. Meade might have gotten Bimey home, but he would have ridden a foul sort of race.

Saturday was the day when Bimelech was "looked in the eye" by a challenger in the stretch and had nothing left. Certain horses don't like to run when they are challenged. But that "looking in the eye" business is mostly a pretty phrase. Bimelech simply didn't have enough. A Black Toney colt was beaten by a Sir Gallahad in the last sixteenth of a mile and a quarter race. There alone is fuel for a debate.

In recent years, the Sir Gallahad progeny have been more fashionable than the Black Toney get, but Black Toney adherents can argue that neither Omaha nor Gallant Fox—Sir Gallahad products—were better horses than Black Gold, the 1924 Derby winner. Black Toney sired also the Derby winner Broker's Tip. A Gallahad colt was merely better than a Black Toney on last Saturday afternoon.

And another thing. It is conceivable that not Bimelech but Gallahadion may be the super-horse. Seabiscuit, who certainly deserves that rating, was a bum as a 2-year-old, like Gallahadion. And he was no great shucks as a 3-year-old. But thereafter he became the hottest article in racing. There is time for Gallahadion. But there we go, hinting at a wonder-horse after all we've just inscribed on the subject.

Scalzo Signs For Feather Title Bout

New York Italian To Meet Leading Contender May 15 At the Stadium

Pete Scalzo, recently proclaimed world's featherweight champion by the National Boxing Association, will defend his title at Griffith Stadium Wednesday night, May 15, under the promotion of Joe Turner, it was announced last night.

Turner stated that Scalzo had signed to meet any one of the first five ranking featherweights now on the N. B. A. list, and that the championship match would be waged over the 15-round route.

Announcement of the signing of Scalzo for the title fight came as a complete surprise to local boxing circles. Promoter Turner, it was believed, had practically abandoned hopes of getting a featherweight championship scrap for the Nation's Capital.

Eligible Foes

Opponents to be considered—ranked in the following order by the N. B. A.—are Jimmy Perrin, of New Orleans; Simon Chavez, of Venezuela; Harry Jeffra, of Baltimore; Frankie Covelli, of Chicago, and Jack Wilson, of Pittsburgh.

All of the five above mentioned fighters have the endorsement of the N. B. A., and Promoter Turner will meet with Col. Heinie Miller, president of the association, sometime today to decide on the opponent for the 15-round tuccle.

It is doubtful if Jeffra will be in the picture, since he already is preparing for a match with Joey Archibald, now stripped of his title by the N. B. A., in Baltimore late this month.

Anxious for Fight

Chavez, who holds one victory over Scalzo; Covelli, who has amassed a great record and come long ways in the last six months, and Wilson are desperately anxious for the title crack, according to word relayed here yesterday by their managers when word of the signing spread like wildfire.

The N. B. A. a few days ago declared Scalzoz the world's champion, succeeding Joey Archibald, who was knocked off his perch by the N. B. A. when he refused to defend his title against Scalzo.

Scalzoz, 22-year-old New York Italian, hailing from the East side of the great Metropolis, holds a knockout over Archibald, and victories over all of the leading featherweights in the game today.

Managed by Pete (Silver Fox) Reilly, who already has piloted four world's champions, Scalzo zoomed up the professional ladder a year after he quit the Golden Gloves ranks.

Not only a knockout artist, as attested by his kayo over Archibald, his knockout recently over Ginger Foran, Scalzo is one of the most colorful fighters in the squared circle today. He has turned down numerous offers to go on the radio, stage and Hollywood, since he has been pointing for the one goal in his life — world's featherweight champion.

French State Carnera Is Army Deserter

Paris, May 5 (AP).—The newspaper Paris Soir said today that former World Heavyweight Champion Primo Carnera had been declared a deserter from the French army by French military authorities.

The newspaper said the Italian-born Carnera, who became a naturalized Frenchman, left France several years ago and once again took up residence in Italy.

Feller, Tribe Defeat Bosox, 6-1; Take First

Bobby Gives Seven Hits, Fans Eight Before 32,000; Rookie Harris Shelled From Mound in Third Inning

By the Associated Press

Boston, May 5.—Bob Feller blinded the Boston Red Sox by a 6-1 score today, carrying his Cleveland Indians to the American League leadership with a seven-hit pitching masterpiece, studded with eight strikeouts.

Feller was linked with undefeated Mickey Harris in a widely heralded pitching duel, which attracted 32,500 to Fenway Park. It was not Mickey's day, however, and the cocky lefthander deaprted in the third, after the Indians flailed him for seven hits and five runs.

In all, the Indians combed the offerings of four Boston hurlers for 13 hits. Ken Keltner, Cleveland third baseman, laced out a single, double and home run and drove in three runs in a field day at bat.

Herb Hash, Fritz Ostermueller and Charlie Wagner followed Harris to the mound, but their efforts were in vain.

Boston made only one serious threat, scoring its run in the eighth on Doc Cramer's double to left center and a sizzling single by Ted Williams.

Keltner opened the Indian scoring. He doubled in the second and scampered home on Rollie Hemsley's single. After Mack walked, Feller struck out, but Lou Boudreau chased Hemsley home with a single before Roy Weatherly tapped into a double play.

Giant Errors Give Reds 3-2 Victory

Cincinnati, May 5.—Two Giant errors gave the Cincinnati Reds two runs and a 3-2 victory today.

First Baseman Norman wrecked the New Yorkers' hopes—pinned on a 2-1 lead taken in the second inning and held until the seventh.

In ths frame Mike McCormick got to Hal Schumacher for a single; Buckey Walters forced McCormick and then stole second; Bill Werber walked and Lonnie Frey grounded to Nick Witek, Young dropping the throw. Walters romped hom, with Werber following over as Danning dropped the ball at the plate on Young's throw.

Mel Ott and Harry Danning counted for the Terrymen in the second on a fly by Bill Jerges and a single by Witek.

It was the fourth straight victory for Walters, who allowed seven hits, the same number the Reds collected from Prince Hal.

Catcher Ernie Lombardi pounded a two-base hit in the second and then scored on Eddie Joost's single for the Reds' other run.

St. Louis Scores Five in Eighth; Case Hits First Homer Into Stands

By Shirley Povich.

In full view of 14,000 unhappy Griffith Stadium fans, Dutch Leonard was vigorously assaulted by the St. Louis Browns yesterday, and the Nats—poor things—accumulated their fourth straight defeat. It wasn't even close. The score was 7 to 3.

With a complete disregard for the pitching reputation of Leonard and his knuckle ball, the revitalized Browns littered the premises with important base hits and won the game in a late-inning surge. Coincidentally, Vernon Kennedy outpitched Leonard.

As late as the seventh inning, the Nats were enjoying the comforts of a 3-to-2 lead, acquired during the inning when George Case reached the leftfield bleachers with a home run for the first time in his life. A colleague was on base at the time, and Case's contribution transformed the Nats' 2-to-1 deficit into a one-run lead.

Browns Unload In Eighth

At the time, Leonard had allowed only four hits and the 14,000 were very smug about it all, inasmuch as any sort of a lead in the late innings has always been tantamount to a victory for Leonard. But yesterday, that notion was exceedingly premature.

In the eighth the Browns unloaded five hits against Leonard, three of them two-baggers, and stampeded four runs across the plate. And in the ninth Vernon Kennedy, himself, hammered a triple to centerfield to add an entirely superfluous run.

It was Kennedy who, in fact, launched the winning uprising against Leonard in the eighth. He singled to right to put the tying run on base and after Alan Strange struck out, Walter Judnich, late of Kansas City, lashed a double to right that scored Kennedy. George McQuinn then beat the Nats.

McQuinn Doubles

He slammed a two-bagger against the leftfield wall to score Judnich, and a bit later Myril Hoag, another former Yankee, produced a single to left that scored McQuinn. Leonard's knuckle ball was getting an awful massaging but the Browns weren't through, not by a long shot. The next long shot was provided by Berardino who doubled to deep left to score Hoag with the fourth run of the luscious inning.

Leonard did very nicely at the outset. He pitched a single to

New Yorker Winner In North-South Shoot

One of the hottest shoot-offs in the history of the event featured the last day of firing in the North-South Skeet Championships yesterday at National Capital Skeet Club, the coveted all-bore title going to Lewis Hutcheson, of Larchmont, N. Y., after four extra trips to the line.

The New Yorker's triumph, scored over defending champion Rufus Watson and Dr. Don Johnson, of the host club, completed the downfall of last year's titlist in the two-day pigeon smashing.

Winding up the regulation 100 targets with near-perfect 99's, the three sharpshooters began what was to be a prolonged shootoff. Johnson fell by the wayside as his rivals turned in perfect scores on the first 25. On the next 25 Watson and Hutcheson again shattered everything that sailed their way. Each missed once on the third shootoff, and finally Hutcheson took the crown on the fourth round with another 25-25 as Watson missed once.

Despite the outsider's victory in the All-Bore, the home range had its innings yesterday when its stellar five-man team, the Rebels, beat out an club from Valhalla, N. Y. by six points. The winning five turned in a New York-South record total of 487. Watson, George Deyoe and Frank starred in the effort.

With Watson's defeat yesterday, most of the defending titlists bowed out. Saturday Dick Shaughnessy, 19-year-old Massachusetts boy who stole the show last year with victories in the 410 and 20-Gauge, was ousted in favor of R. E. Stuart, of the Rebel team. Stuart had 91x100 and 99x100, respectively.

Another new champion was Mrs. M. L. Smythe, who cracked a total of 96 birds for the women's crown Saturday. The junior shoot went to Larry Williams with 45x45, and the team of Hutcheson and Mc-

1st Inning Rally Aids Tigers Beat Yankees

By the Associated Press

New York, May 5.—The Detroit Tigers batted around in the first inning today and proceeded to hand the World Champion New York Yankees a 6-to-4 setback.

It was no mighty assault the Tigers let loose, but it was as affective as if they had won by a bigger margin. Out of their fireworks in the first inning and the Tigers collected just three runs, added two more in the third and finished off with one in the ninth. Earl Averill and Rudy York each made three hits.

Buck Newsom started on the mound for Detroit, but gave four hits and six walks to force his removal in the fourth.

On his way off the diamond Newsom made some remark which caused Umpire William Summers to take offense and was waved to the dressing room—where he was already headed.

Archie McKain then took charge and got credit for the victory although he had to be rescued by Al Benton in the ninth.

The Yanks filled the bases in three different innings, but the one run they scored in the ninth was the only time they made one of these threats count.

Spud Chandler was the losing pitcher, giving up the first five runs.

WhiteSoxHand Chubby Dean First Setback

By the Associated Press

Philadelphia, May 5.—The Chicago White Sox handed southpaw Pitcher Chubby Dean of the Athletics his first defeat of the season today by scoring a 6-to-5 victory before 16,174 at Shibe Park.

Pete Appleton, who followed Ted Lyons and Rookie Vallie Eaves to the mound and pitched hitless ball for two innings, was credited with the triumph.

Chicago won the game in the eighth inning on singles by Taft Wright, Luke Appling and Julius Solters and a mental lapse on the part of Outfielder Dee Miles who delayed throwing the ball in on Appling's single. Wright scored the tying run on the play, racing home all the way from first base.

Easton Nine Routs Annapolis by 20-5

Special Dispatch to The Post

Annapolis, May 5.—Gov. Herbert R. O'Conor tossed the first ball to set the stage for the opening game of the Annapolis baseball club here today. The Shoremen put the game away in the first there innings during which they gathered a total of 11 runs.

State Senator Louis N. Phipps, Anne Arundel County, was on the receiving end of the Governor's pitch. The pair went through the ceremonies in good shape. The Governor in his younger days played baseball with Loyola College, of Baltimore, while Senator Phipps played with a county team. Several fans watched the game.

On the Line

With CONSIDINE

New York, May 5.—Man o' War lost a race, too. But he had an excuse. He was mishandled at the start, was left at the post, and was coming like a bullet at the end of the short race. The contemporary and the succeeding crops of race fans forgave him that one loss. But even if Bimelech picks up his winning streak and holds it to the end of his racing days, and numerically outwins Man o' War, a lot of people are going to think of him always as the fellow who choked up in the clutch.

CONSIDINE

Bimelech had no excuses. He started from the second slot, was in good position until the final turn, stuck his nose out in front for a brief instant just when he should have done so. And then—without being hindered or bumped or pocketed—got licked by a colt who could do no better for a mile and a quarter on a fast track than 2:05. He barely took second place in a race won in selling-plater time.

These tactics fitted in beautifully with the plans of Carroll Bierman, who was up on Gallahadion. He kept Gallahadion snug against the rail from the moment he popped out of the No. 1 stall, and as the race went along saw the tiring field come back and slip behind him. Now, at the head of the stretch, with Bimelech warding off Dit and leaving a beautiful open lane on the rail, Bierman whacked Gallahadion and the son of Sir Gallahad III (sire of Gallant Fox, grandsire of Omaha) pounded down the vacated highway. Bimelech fought him for nearly a furlong. But—on this day at least—couldn't take it when they looked him in the eye. Which is the point we're trying to bring out. If Bimelech doesn't especially like to look them in the eye, he could have moved out away from there, if he's the horse most of us believed him to be. Maybe he was hypnotized. He certainly was wobbly by the time he reached the finish line, a length and a half behind the winner, and one nose ahead of Dit.

Some of the accounts said that Jockey Fred Smith wore Bimelech down by making him go after the pace-setting Roman, a little beyond half-way down the backstretch. Everybody except Smith apparently knew that Roman would fold presently—so why tire his horse by catching up with him? But this kind of an argument tends to indicate that Roman was setting a killing pace. And he wasn't, as the fractional times of 1:23 2-5, 0:48, 1:12 4-5, 1:38 3-5 and 2:05 eloquently bespeak.

From the looks of thinks Jockey Smith was more concerned with Dit than Gallahadion as the field swept into the home stretch. Dit was beside him, to his right, on the final curve and—in approved fashion—Smith let Bimelech swing a little wide, thus making Dit swing even wider.

We felt sorry for old Ed Bradley. He had bred and reared a story book horse in Bimelech . . . Last son of the great sire Black Toney . . . smart, fast, unbeaten and the joy and consolation of the old man's declining years. Victory would have been the fitting last chapter in the story of Bradley's wondrous life.

Bimelech was bad news for Col. Matt Winn, in a way. He was so universally considered the best of the lot (311 of the 313 reporter present picked him to win) that only $465,000 was bet on the race by a crowd estimated at 95,000. The mutuel handle for the day was only a trifle over a million dollars, while a week before, a crowd less than one third as large bet the same amount at Jamaica. Nearly $900,00 was bet at Jamaica Saturday by 19,000 persons.

Thus another winner of the Belmont Futurity, biggest 2-year-old race, fails to win the biggest of the 3-year-old races. Bimelech was the ninth Futurity winner to fail in the Derby, and only nine have started in Winn's classic. Bimelech was a little different than the others, however. Most of the Futurity winners have been out and out sprinters. He seemed to be the exception, the distance colt who could also sprint. The future may point out that he is the great exception—but it will always be said of him that he blew his greatest chance and blew it like a second-rater.

Man of the Month

By Arch McDonald

Station WJSV Baseball Broadcaster

The Man of the Month contest is sponsored jointly by The Washington Post and Station WJSV. Following each of the Nats' games, Arch McDonald will award points to Washington players as he deems performances merit. The Man of the Month will be presented with a $50 merchandise order by The Post.

The only fellow who came close to being any sort of a hero for the Nats yesterday was George Case and to him goes the bulk of the points in the latest Man of the Month award. We are distributing points as follows on the basis of yesterday's game:

To Case, five points, because his home run in the seventh with a man on base wiped out the Browns' lead and put the Nats in front.

To Zeke Bonura, two points, because he tripled in two official times at bat and made a pair of clever pickups of low throws to first base.

To Rick Ferrell, two points, because he singled twice and scored a run.

The totals:

Cecil Travis	12	Zeke Bonura	4
George Case	7	Rick Ferrell	4
Jimmy Bloodworth	6	Jimmy Polchi	3

It designates Ship 322 the flagship of Sea Scout units in Pennsylvania, New Jersey, Delaware, Virginia, Maryland and the District.

Two District Clubs Sweep Golf Matches

Indian Spring, Capital Teams Win In Four-Ball Play; Favorites Advance

By a Staff Correspondent

Baltimore, May 5.—Two District clubs, Indian Spring and Capital, sent two teams into the second round of the Maryland State Golf Association four-ball championships here today at the Woodholme Club, while Terra Mariae was the only host city club to advance both two-man combinations.

Play ran remarkably true to form, with 13 of the 16 No. 1 teams from the seven Washington and nine Baltimore clubs winning their matches, and the three top combinations which lost were not in the form of upsets.

The success of the Indian Spring duos was predicted but Capital's golfers surprised by batting 1.000 for the day. The top team of Frank White and Billy Houghton won on the eighteenth over Eddie Semmler and Paul Hampshire, of Hillendale. The second team of Russ Hollebaugh and George Molloy defeated Columbia's No. 2 combination of Earle Skinker and George F. Miller, 2 and 1, when Hollebaugh chipped in the cup from high grass bordering the eighteenth green.

Peacock-Rippy Wins

Indian Spring's Roger Peacock and Claude Rippy, one of the strongest amateur twosomes to pair together in tournament history, held a 6-up lead at the twelfth and won, 5 and 4, over Marshall Neel and E. G. Schmidt. Lou Harrison and Jock Olmsted paired again to give the Four Corners Club its other victory, over Alex Knapp and J. D. Potts, of Elkridge, 2 up.

Only three clubs were eliminated from the competition. Columbia, Sparrows Point and Elkridge. Columbia's first team of Maury Nee and Martin McCarthy met the defending champions, Spencer Overton and Erford Barnes, of Rolling Road, and halved the first nine holes, but the latter team won four of the next six for a 4 and 3 triumph.

Bogart-Malone Hot

Ralph Bogart and Charley Malone, Congressional, played hot golf at times to swamp Dan Crome and Morton Rome, Suburban, 5 and 4, but Congressional's second twosome of Earl McAleer and Tom Belshe lost to Bobby Jones and John MacKenzie, of Hillendale, on the eighteenth when the latter halved McAleers birdie on the finishing hole.

Max Taylor and Louis Fuchs, Manor's second combination, let a 3 up lead slip away to lose to Jim Gipe and Joe Balestri, of Beaver Dam, 2 up, while Manor's top team of Mel Shipley and Ralph Gibson won on the eighteenth over R. Bonnell and J. P. Gorter of Elkridge.

Kenwood batted .500 when Jack Keele and Charles Vaile protected a 1 up lead to best the host club's second team, Charles Balder and Dr. A. Goldboro, 2 and 1. John Miller and Forest Thompson of Beaver Dam, were upset by Nathan Kaufman and David Halle, of Suburban.

The second round will be played next Sunday at Beaver Dam with eight Baltimore and as many Washington teams remaining.

Upper bracket:

Sparrows Point No. 1 (A. W. Peel and Fred Greiner) was defeated by Towson No. 2 (Stuart Windsor and Edward Johnston), 1 up, 22 holes.

Elkridge NNo. 1 (Alex Knapp and J. D. Potts) was defeated by Indian Spring No. 2 (Lou Harrison and Jock Olmsted, 2 up.

Bimelech and Gallahadion Meet in Preakness Saturday

Pictor, Dit Also to Go At Pimlico

Mioland, Royal Man Likely Starters Col. Bradley Plans To Attend Race

By Walter Haight
A Staff Correspondent

En route from Kentucky Derby, May 6.—E. R. Bradley's beaten Bimelech will have another crack at Mrs. Ethel V. Mars' Gallahadion, 1940 Derby winner, in the Preakness at Pimlico on Saturday. The two colts, along with four others who ran in the Blue Grass classic, are scheduled to arrive in Baltimore tomorrow and Tuesday from Churchill Downs.

By telephone from Lexington, Ky., this morning, Colh Bradley said that he would, in all probability, watch the Preakness. The 80-year-old sportsman did not believe he could stand the strain of seeing the Derby. The man who had hoped for his fifth Derby winner and had branded Bimelech as "the best horse I ever owned and bred" just smiled when he heard that the colt was second.

At his Idle Hour Farm, he said, "Naturally, I would have liked to have had Bimelech win the Derby but he did not. I sort of feel relieved about the thing. His defeat has taken the tension away. I am very anxious to see what he will do in the Preakness."

Praise Jockey

Trainer William Hurley, who saddled Bimelech, told Col. Bradley that he did not believe the colt liked the cuppy track that had been rolled into fast condition. Both the trainer and owner expressed themselves as satisfied with the manner in which Jockey Freddie Smith rode the colt.

Next to the engine on this train are three horses likely to start in the Preakness. They are W. L. Brann's Pictor, Tower Stable's Royal Man and the W-L Ranch's Sky Dog. The last-named along with Gallant Dream, a stablemate, were shipped to Louisville for the Derby, but neither started. Gallant Dream was to have been on this train but developed a slight ailment and will be sent East later in the week. Both Owner Brann and Trainer Lou Schaefer, who are in this car, are puzzled by the poor showing of Pictor. The second son of Challenger II to try for a Derby finished in last position and never got up a gallop.

"I could see when the field went by the stands the first time that Pictor was not himself," said Schaefer, a Washingtonian. "The colt was not on the bit and Jockey Woolf could not get him to running. Had the time been better and his margin of defeat less, I could have understood. He ate well and trained well at Louisville. Perhaps it just wasn't his day."

Bimelech Fit

Bimelech, in the same care with Dit, left Louisville for Baltimore today. Trainer Hurley said that the Black Toney coldt "cooled out" in good fashion and seemed to be as fit as ever. He denied that Bimelech was trained "too fine."

Gallahadion, the hero of the Derby, will travel to the Preakness in a special car leaving Churchill Downs Tuesday. In another car will be Mioland, C. S. Howard's colt which finished fourth in the Derby. Trainer Tom Smith said that Mioland would start in the Preakness and also that Kayak II would not go in Wednesday's Dixie Handicap.

Trainer Roy Waldon, who sent Gallahadion out to his surprise victory, plans to accompany the colt to Baltimore. Waldon, however, is suffering from a deep chest cold and may have to delay his departure on doctor's orders.

Three jockeys who probably will see action in the Preakness are on this train. They are George Woolf, probably the most shocked by Pictor's poor showing of the Brann forces; Johnny Gilbert, who rode Royal Man, and Buddy Haas, who had the mount on Dit. Gilbert said he couldn't get much run out of Royal Man while Haas smiled and pointed toward Baltimore.

Major Wins Two Blues At Rock Creek

Chestnut Jumper From Potomac Riding School, Triumph in Jumps

By Anne Hagner

A consistent chestnut jumper named Major, from the Potomac Potomac Riding School, won two blue ribbons at the Rock Creek Bridle Path Horse Show yesterday at the park equitation field to be the biggest winner of the day.

Ridden alternately by Dorothy Smith and Frances Crawford, Major went well all during the show to win one division of the 3-foot jumping event and then to triumph over 4-foot fences in the open jumping class. Miss Smith had the mount in the 4-foot class, where Major defeated another representative from Potomac, Greystone, with Patricia Joyce up, and Elaine McDowell on her own Gay Melody, who placed second and third in that order.

Major is no newcomer to the Rock Creek shows, for in last falls event he and Miss Smith won the 3½-foot jumping class for riding academy horses and placed fourth in the 4-foot jumping.

Snow White Is Winner

Others who fared well for the benefit of the near capacity crowd included Norman Clarke's good saddle pony, Snow White, who won the class for children's saddle ponies with little Shelley Warren riding. Snow White won the same class in the 1939 show, when he defeated two of yesterday's ribbon winners, Billy Furey's Hotcha and George Ballman's Pinto.

In the event for privately owned bridle path hacks, U. S. Randle's flashy show prospect, Randle's Surprise, walked, trotted and cantered to victory over Sam Agnew's Kitty Vee, Oliver Durant's Little Princess, and Miss Smith on her own Top Sail.

Randle's 4-year-old, with Happy Christmas riding, also placed second to Eddie Talbert on Elias Marks' Popover, who turned in a nice round to win the 3½-foot jumping class for privately owned mounts.

Midnight Takes Blue

The same event, restricted to riding academy horses, saw Jack Smith take the blue with Norman Clarke's Midnight, from the Bridle Path Stables. Midnight's good performance defeated Edgewater Riding Academy's Smoke Rock, with J. B. MacWilliam up, and Potomac's Greystone, ridden by Patricia Joyce.

Little Danny Durham won the junior horsemanship class on Riverside Riding School's Fancy, placing over Betty Jane Christmas, sister of Happy Christmas, on Penn Russell's Eagle.

Mrs. James Guitar and Raymond H. Norton judged the classes.

On Fishing

Getting outdoors stories accepted by publications never has been too easy. One had to have something on the ball, and then get it over the plate in this case the busy desk of an editor, and if he happened to be one who didn't care for the pursuits of the outdoors, it was just another out.

ACKERMAN.

Today, with fishing the headliner in the sports field, and hunting a close second, the going is easier. For some fortunate young fellow, the Outdoor Writers Association of America with the cooperation of the American Wildlife Institute, is, each year, going to make it so simple as to be almost unbelievable.

A selection will be made from the applications sent in to members of the association in every section of the East and near Midwest, who will be assigned to Washington headquarters of the American Wildlife Institute for a period of eight month, during which he will, through the news bureau, which handles all educational matter for both the American Wildlife Institute and the National Wildlife Federation, be given basic instruction in popularizing wildlife and conservation subjects for newspapers, magazines and radio. During this period the student writer will make contacts with Government agencies interested in wildlife conservation and restoration, and be taught the functions of these agencies.

For two months of the training season he will be assigned to work with some active member of the Outdoor Writers to obtain a more intimate idea of the functions and functionin, of a newspaper in general and an outdoor writer in particular.

For the last two months of the one-year training period, the student writer will be assigned to work on some paper in need of an outdoor writer, without cost to the paper.

At the end of the 12-month training period, the student may continue with the paper to which he has been assigned, if he has demonstrated a need for his services, or he may be eligible to obtain an outdoor writer's job on some other publication.

During the entire 12-month training period the student writer will be given $25 weekly through the American Wildlife Institute. Expenses of any field trips he may be required to take and certain other incidental expenses will be met also by the American Wildlife Institute.

So if you have an earnest desire to write, address this column for an application blank. You must be between 21 and 35; of good personal character; have an aptitude for meeting people; a fundamental interest in the outdoors; and most important, a degree in ecology or field biology in some recognized college. Some training in wildlife management is also desirable.

Spiders Lose Big Six Lead To Virginia

Richmond, However, Continues to Pace General Standings

By the Associated Press

Richmond, Va., May 5.—The Richmond Spiders, bowing to Virginia, 2-1, last week in their first baseball encounter of the season with the Cavaliers, dropped to second-place ranking in the Big Six race, but clung to their lead in the general State standings.

Richmond will play four games this week bearing upon the State title race, but the Cavaliers engage only one tSate foe, Washington and Lee, before leaving home to play Maryland and Navy.

The Cavalier triumph over Richmond, the defending State champions, snapped a winning streak of nine straight for the Spiders. Richmond later in the week turned back William and Mary, 11-6, to give them 11 wins and 1 defeat in the general standings, as compared with the 13 wins and 4 defeats for Virginia.

The leading contenders for top honors in the State will meet again next week, Friday, May 17, in a game postponed last month because of rain. The game tprobably will be another crucial encounter in determining the final winner of the State title.

Virginia Tech, with rain cancelling its only scheduled game of the week, kept to third-place rating in the Big Six with 3 victories and 2 defeats. Randolph-Macon, with 10 victories and 3 defeats this season, moved up into third place in general standings after Roanoke spoiled a previous undefeated record by dropping games to Hampden-Sydney and to V. M. I.

Nats Lose Fourth Straight Game

Strange, the first man to face him, and then he retired the next 15 hitters in rapid succession. By the end of the fifth he had a 1-0 lead, thanks to Rip Radcliff who muffed Ferrell's single to left in the fifth. Ferrell reached second on the error and eonard scored him with a single through the box.

That 1-0 lead of Nats disappeared in the sixth. Catcher Swift tripled over Walker's head and Kennedy moved him home with a long fly. With two out, the Browns produced another run with the help of the only walk Leonard issued. It was sandwiched by singles off the bats of Judnich and Radcliffe.

Case Homers

The proceedings seemed dire for the Nats as Kennedy carried his 2-1 lead into the seventh, but Rick Ferrell singled to center to put the tying run on base. The run seemed far, far from home when Leonard forced Ferrell in an attempt to sacrifice, but then the most amazing thing happened. It was Case's homer. The Nats' center fielder truly unloaded against the next pitch to belt the ball into the stands and the Nats into a 3-2 lead.

But in the ninth, the Nats were facing a new deficit of four runs. Hope stirred faintly when Pinch Hitter Jake Early walked, but it sagged when Case popped up. There was a revival when Lewis singled to right, and then the cheers of the 14,000 overlapped a moan. Gerald Walker lashed a ball toward third base and Bernardino speared it with his gloved hand, retiring Lewis at first base for a game-ending double play.

'Baering Down'

What we don't understand about this war is how it breaks out at unexpected places like the seams of a bat boy.

The neighbors get all the grief and are entitled to none of the eggs.

Zim Zam Zum Meets Pat Corrigan At Arena This Week

Wrestledom's mystery man, Zim Zam Zum, he of the jet black beard and bald head, goes into a semifinal match Thursday night at Turner's Arena on the card featuring the Swedish Angel, wrestling monstrosity, and Nanjo Singh, Hindu "cobra clutch" expert. Zum will battle Pat Corrigan, Irish ace.

In two matches since making his debut Zum beat Vanka Zelesnaik and drew with Dropkick Murphy.

Singh, headlined for 16 consecutive weeks last year, is expected to find it difficult getting his "cobra" on the Angel, whose swaying, apelike arms may combat such a hold.

County League Opens Season; Heights Wins

Democrats Defeated In Feature; President Houston Starts Race

With President Houston hurling out the first ball, Capitol Heights featured the opening of the Prince Georges County Baseball League yesterday with a 13-4 victory over the Democrats at Shady Oak.

Charley Bubble whiffed 14 batsmen as he held the opposition to 6 hits. The most productive inning for the winners was the eighth in which seven runs were scored.

Scores in other opening engagements were equally one-sided. Maryland Aces, behind the one-hit pitching of Clements, trampled Sunnybrook, 8-1, and Cottage City pounded out a 17-3 decision over Fireside Inn. The Cottagemen ground out 20 hits, including seven doubles and a triple, as F. Branzell turned in a five-hit mound performance.

Los Angeles To Be Site of Olympic Trials

New York, May 5 (INS).—Although the 1940 Olympic games in Finland have been canceled, the American Olympic committee, meeting today in New Pork City, selected the Olympic Coliseum in Los Angeles as the site for the American trials.

Only boxing and track and field athletes, according to the committee, will compete in the California games. All team members for other sports, except boxing, will be selected from national championship meets to be held in various parts of the country during the summer.

The rowing trials will be staged at Princeton, the committee announced.

Although no definite dates have been set, it was believed the games at the Coliseum will take place in August and the rowing events will be held in the latter part of June.

Stalin Holds Trumps

By Roger W. Babson

Italy Seen Vulnerable

WORLD WAR II has just started. Up until the time Hitler embarked on his Scandinavian campaign there was always the possibility of a settlement around the peace table. Now this last hope of avoiding hostilities has been sabotaged. The war may well be a long one. Certainly, I see no hope of peace this year. Furthermore, I strongly believe that Russia—not Italy—holds the winning cards in this gigantic war game.

You read in the papers that Italy will soon be in the war on the side of Germany, but in my talks with army officers and government officials of England I learn they have no fear of Italy. These men recognizt that the Germans are a wonderful people; they did not want to go to war against them. But they have no fear of the Italians. Besides, the Italians do not like the Germans, nor do they like to fight. Mussolini is now in a bad fix. He has a big army in Ethopia. In order to keep his supply lines open to Ethiopia, he must go through the Suez Canal. This is absolutely controlled by France and England.

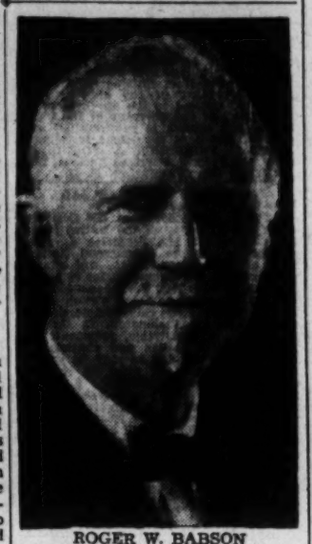
IF ITALY should declare war on the Allies tonight, the canal would be shut up tight tomorrow, and Italy's Ethiopian army would be on the spot. Of course, Il Duce could send another army to the Balkans and perhaps take Yugoslavia and Rumania. The British and French have over half a million men in the Near East with the idea of protecting the Balkans. If Italy went into the war to help Germany she could perhaps break through to the Black Sea, but she could never get that Allied army. It would need only to withdraw into Turkey so that it could not be surrounded or penned up.

Moreover, Italy has a very vulnerable coast line. Practically all her big cities are on the coast, while her industrial cities are within a few miles of the French border. Italy may go into the war before it is over; but my guess is that she will wait until the outcome is more certain. I should be very much surprised if Italy were foolish enough to get mixed up at the present time. If she does, it will not disturb the Allies very much; they would only like to know where she stands so they could cut their cloth accordingly.

WHEN IT COMES to Russia, that is another story. England has not said much against Russia. She is giving harsh orders to Germany and Italy; but not to Russia. England has a feeling that after Russia gets what she wants (which apparently she now has to a certain extent), she will trade with the Allies or else remain truly neutral. She has part of Poland, a portion of Finland, and will soon get back some of Rumania which belonged to Russia for many years. Then, according to the British, Stalin will not bother with Hitler any more.

So, as I see the European picture, Stalin holds the winning cards. When the psychological moment comes, Stalin can lay down the peace terms and both sides will have to do pretty much as he says.

Russia also holds the aces in the Far East. Russia and Japan are natural enemies. They have already fought one war. At the present time neither Germany nor Italy can help Japan; neither has battleships in the Pacific. Japan can be helped only by England and France. If the European war should end tonight and the Allies should side with Chiang Kai-shek, the Japanese would be compelled to move out of China. On the other hand, if England and France sided with Japan, Chiang Kai-shek would have to give up So Japan will try desperately to make terms with England and France.



ROGER W. BABSON

MEANWHILE, why should Russia stand idly by and let England and France make a deal with Japan? The Soviets will come in to the discussions and seek the friendship of the Allies. Russia cannot afford to have Japan get China. She then would be out on a limb! So it seems to me that when the time comes, Stalin will side with the Allies. Hence, the very natural thing is for Russia, England and France to get together in the European conflict.

Therefore, I say to all business men and investors: Do not be upset by what is happening in Norway or even in the Balkans. Do not get frightened if the war extends to Sweden. These small countries must inevitably give up their independence to one side or the other. But—with eagle eyes—watch Russia! Meanwhile, focus your attention on your own business. National activity is 10 per cent above the 1939 level. In the main, I am sticking to my New Year forecast for the first half of 1940—that business will average close to 10 per cent above the same months of a year ago!

Sunny Day Finds Every Capital Tea Crowded

Ralph K. Chases Give Garden Party For Marsha Hatch and Her Fiance, Glen Leet, Who'll Marry June 11

By Elizabeth Henney

A day so gently springlike as to startle a winter-weary Washington, brought out guests in flocks at every party on the calendar, and turned many a scheduled tea into a veritable garden party.

One of the loveliest of the latter was the event given yesterday afternoon in honor of Miss Marsha Hatch, daughter of Senator and Mrs. Carl A. Hatch, of New Mexico, and her fiance, Glen Leet. Host and hostess at the affair were Mr. and Mrs. Ralph K. Chase, and their "home-on-a-high-hill" at 3200 Rodman street was the scene of the gayety. Senator Rush Dew Holt, brother of Mrs. Chase, who makes his Washington home with them, was present for part of the afternoon, but had to leave in the middle of things to return to his campaign in West Virginia.

Receiving in the drawing room with Mrs. Chase was Miss Hatch, the latter gowned in a street-length roman-striped frock with a predominant color note of darker blue. Circling her waist was a sash of wine grosgrain; her hat and accessories were of dark blue and she topped the outfit with a smart bolero of silver fox. Mrs. Chase wore also a street length frock, fashioned with a black skirt, a black and white printed bodice and set off with an orchid corsage.

Reception Held At Chaplin's Home

Arriving guests congregated first in the drawing room and the dining room, around a tea table set with gleaming silver and centered with a bowl of jonquils and honeysuckle from the Chase garden. he lure of the spring air was too much for most of them, and soon the Listen!

with Slocum

I suppose if Gallahadion can beat Bimelech, and the Brooklyn Dodgers can lead the National League and the Senators can take two out of three from the Yankees, anything can happen. While there seems a normal limit to miracles one occurred in the wilds of Chevy Chase yesterday that passeth all understanding. NBC beat CBS at something and did quite a job of it, too.

The score was 13-9, the game was softball, and Lady Luck (I hope) was playing for the WRC-WMAL lads. Bud Barry, of the NBC thing, rescued a group of his coworkers from the toils of Scoop Russell's salt mines long enough to get them out to the ball park, and whether it was the prospect of mingling with free men or the result of enforced clean living, I wouldn't know, but anyhow the pampered WJSV lads got their ears knocked off.

NBC had a pitcher who was much too good. In fact I'd like to confront him with a dynamic microphone to see if he could tell it from a cuspidor. Of course, he might not have been a ringer, but he was awfully good and I'd like to think he was something they picked up on the way to the ball park.

Incidentally, if Mr. Clark Griffith wants to pick up a pretty fair catcher, I'd like to recommend his old pal, Bill Coyle. Wilyum, a sports announcer of some talent, is really a bearcat with that mask and chest protector. And that Bill Crego hits 'em so far it doesn't make any difference if he doesn't know where second base is.

But wait'll next time.

That very interesting primary over in Maryland will be covered this evening via WJSV from the city room of the Post. There'll be one broadcast at 9:45 and WJSV will interrupt its regular schedule from time to time until 2:00 a. m. with last minute counts.

LEAP YEAR LADY by ALMA SIOUX SCARBERRY

Conclusion

THE DOCTOR questioned Shamrock at length and then asked with a smile, "Where's your husband, little lady?"

Smoky said after a short silence: "I—I don't know. We are separated."

The doctor closed his instrument case. "How long ago?"

"About six weeks." Shamrock's face colored.

The doctor patted her hand: "Well, I hope it's just a lover's quarrel, my dear. You're going to need him."

"Why?" Smoky sat up.

"You're going to have a baby."

Torchy gasped. "Oh, Smoky! A—baby!"

Shamrock stared at the doctor childishly. "Are—are you sure?"

He nodded. "I think so. Do you want a baby?"

Smoky was silent for a little while, then a little smile came to her white lips. "I—love babies," she nodded, and held out her arms to Torchy. "Oh, Torchy. Can you imagine that! I—I'm going to have a baby!"

The doctor got up, grinning. "That's the girl! And you'll get along fine. Don't you worry. Shall I come back to see you tomorrow? I'd advise rest for a day or two in bed, because of your train ride. Then you may get up and go about your usual routine."

Torchy's Plan

That night after Shamrock was asleep, Torchy lay in her own twin bed, staring at the wall in an agony of uncertainty. Poor little Smoky! A baby right then would ruin her chance in pictures, and by the time it was born maybe no one would want her. Babies were wonderful, of course. But when your husband was gone and you had to earn your own living, the responsibility was a little more than Torchy could imagine assuming.

On the train Shamrock had showed her a clipping from a Boston paper. Tex, she had read, had recovered from his amnesia and was recuperating in a health resort in the mountains of South Carolina.

Suddenly Torchy got up, and, putting her guilty conscience behind her, searched until she found the clipping in Shamrock's bag. Then, slipping on a house coat and her polo coat, she went down to the lobby to send Tex a wire.

At the telegraph desk she wrote hurriendly: "Do you want to know where Smoky is? Wire me Hollywood Boulevard Hotel. Torchy Dover."

That would at least give Tex a chance to say yes or no. And it certainly was not double-crossing Smoky. Shamrock would eat her heart out more than ever for her husband when she knew she was going to have a baby. It would kill her if he married Alicia Lowery and she could never let him know he was a father.

Torchy instructed the clerk at the desk that the phone was not to be rung if an answer came, and that the telegram was not to be given to Miss O'Toole. The bellboy was to knock on the door softly and give it only to her.

The answer came two hours later, and she asked the boy to wait outside the door. Torchy took the wire into the bathroom and tore it open with trembling fingers. She read, tears of joy springing to her eyes: "Going crazy trying to find her. Wire me at once. Will leave by plane immediately. Regards. Tex Stacy."

Torchy scribbled her answer and gave it to the bellboy: "She is with me. Will not tell her you are coming. Love. Torchy."

By the next evening Torchy was so unnerved with suspense Smoky smiled from her bed: "Goodness, Torchy! You'd think you were the one who is going to be a mamma. You're not scared, are you? I'm not."

Torchy took another turn around the room. "Scared! What of? What's having a baby with all the care women get these days?"

A Surprise Coming

She went to the closet and took out Smoky's most becoming housecoat. "Here," she handed it to her. "I think you ought to put this on and doll yourself up a little bit. You look like a ghost without make-up on. Let me fix your hair and do your face."

Smoky smiled, amused. "All right, but who's going to see me?"

"I am," Torchy helped her with the housecoat that was the color of corn flowers and matched her amazing big blue eyes.

She brushed and curled Smoky's red hair, and made her up carefully. Then she ordered chicken broth, crackers and ice cream and fed them to her.

Smoky looked at her affectionately:

"You're too good to me. You're spoiling me terribly."

"Never mind," said Torchy. "I wouldn't be doing it if I didn't think you were the salt of the earth, darling."

When the phone rang Torchy jumped, and her face turned ashen. She took the tray and pushed it under the bad.

Then she grabbed the phone. "S-send him up," she stammered breathlessly and hung up. "I-I've g-got to see somebody." She opened the door and ran down the hall.

Shamrock looked after her, puzzled. Then she sighed, lying back on her pillows and giving way to her grief and fear. "Oh, Tex," she said softly, heartbrokenly. "Oh, Tex."

When she looked up and saw him standing in the doorway she was sure it was her imagination. But suddenly he was across the room and his arms were holding her close. His lips found hers hungrily.

"My darling, my darling!" he said brokenly. "Oh, why did you run away?"

She clung to him, crying tears of joy. "You do remember me? Oh, my dear, you do remember me! Then you didn't have amnesia when you married me?"

He laughed softly, holding her close. "How could I forget you, sweetheart? I ran away because I was so fed up with the way I'd always had to live. My soul wasn't my own. Father announced my engagement to Alica without my knowing about it, because he thought it would help him politically.

"That when I made up my mind I'd go away and live my own life. I'd always wanted to go on the stage, but Dad was furious at the idea. I thought the cowboy outfit was a good disguise to hide in. Then I met you, and all that mattered was Smoky from then on. You had me so mixed up I didn't know whether I was afoot or horseback, Mrs. Stacy."

I—I was terrible, Tex," Smoky's chin trembling childishly. "Some day I'll tell you all about it."

He said against her mouth: "No, dear! Just tell me you love me. That's all I want to know."

"I love you," she said softly, "I've never loved any one else."

"By the wey," Tex said then, grinning, "the Governor sent his blessing."

"Your—father!"

"Yep. He says tell you he'll be expecting us in Boston not later than Christmas. Sooner if we can make it."

"Oh, I'm so happy!" Smoky closed her eyes tightly. "I'm afraid to look at you for fear it's all a dream and you'll disappear."

Love Wins Over Career

Then she twisted a button on his coat and said with a little embarrassed laugh: "Tex, I—I'm going to have a baby."

"Why, Mrs. Stacy," he beamed, astonished. "But what about the movies?"

"Oh, darling," she wrinkled her nose, "I'm a terrible actress, and you know it. If it hadn't been for the publicity I'd never have gotten a movie offer."

He kissed her again, grinning broadly. "Then I'll make a bargain with you. I'll do the movie acting for the family, and you have the babies. I'll start looking for a screen test tomorrow. How about it?"

"Sold," she laughed happily. And she laughed and laughed until the tears rolled down her cheeks.

If Clancy had heard her he would have said it sounded just like the old Smoky he loved. Back in the good old days in Astoria.

The End.

Frazier Wins Prize for Book On Negro Life

Anisfield Award For 1939 Awarded To Howard Professor

E. Franklin Frazier, professor of sociology at Howard University, was announced yesterday as the winner of the $1,000 John Anisfield prize for 1939 for his book, "The Negro Family in the United States."

J. F. FRAZIER

The award, established six years ago by Edith Anisfield Wolf, of Cleveland, Ohio, in memory of her father, is given annually for the best book in the field of race relations published anywhere in the world.

Dr. Frazier, stating that Negroes react to social and economic conditions as individuals and not in any uniform manner, found in his book that "in the urban environment Negroes and whites in the same occupational classes are being drawn into closer association than in the past." His survey covered a period from the early days of slavery to the present time.

The prize winner obtained his doctorate in sociology at the University of Chicago, which published his book in its sociological series.

The award committee consisted of Dr. Henry Seidel Canby, contributing editor of the Saturday Review of Literature; Prof. Donald Young, of the Social Science Research Council, and Henry Pratt, professor of sociology at New York University and president of the Town Hall Club of New York.

Winchester Orchards To Bloom This Week

Winchester, Va., May 5.—In the hope that orchards of the Shenandoah would be in blossom, a number of tourist parties made excursion trips to Winchester from the Washington, Baltimore and New York areas today, only to learn they were a week too early.

Not until Thursday does Dr. Walter S. Hough, Federal entomologist stationed in Winchester and a veteran observer of bud development, expect the blossoms to be out. In his opinion, the orchards will be at the peak of their beauty next weekend.

Dear Ed:
Thank you for the postcard, and I'm glad you are enjoying yourself in England. God bless King George!
Not much news since you left, except that I nearly broke 100 yesterday — missed a 20 foot putt for a snappy 99. Hurrah for the British Navy!
The weather is fine just now, but we've had a terrible winter - lots of snow and very cold. I hope something unpleasant will happen to Hitler before long.
Our best wishes to both of you.
Sincerely,
Casper Milquetoast

The English censors are doing a great job - a most intelligent group of men.

Mrs. Hawley, General's Widow, Dies

Burial to Be Tomorrow Beside Husband In Arlington Plot

Mrs. Chastina Eunice Hawley, 96, widow of Brig. Gen. Alfred C. Hawley, of the Minnesota National Guard, will be buried tomorrow beside her husband in Arlington National Cemetery.

Mrs. Hawley, a resident of Washington for more than 50 years, died Saturday night at her home at 1136 Twenty-fifth street northwest.

Born in Madrid, N. Y., she was married in 1864 while Gen. Hawley was recovering from wounds received while fighting in the Union Army. After the war, they lived in Washington for a year, then moved to Minnesota, where Gen. Hawley served as United States marshal.

They returned to Washington some years later, after Gen. Hawley served as Indian agent in the Dakotas.

In Washington, the General held an executive position in the old Pensions Office. He died here in 1911.

Mrs. Hawley was active in the Woman's Auxliary of the Grand Army of the Republic. A collector of art, she painted in oils for many years and the walls of her home were covered with portraits of friends and relatives.

The sole survivor is a niece in Los Angeles.
